Something that will be fun for all and is coming up very soon is the Cohasset Dramatic Club's performances of Disney's "High School Musical" in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department. The dates are July 20 at 10 am and 7:30 pm, July 21 at 7:30 pm and July 22 at 2 pm. The show is going to be held at Cohasset Middle-High School at 143 Pond St. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased in advance at Buttonwood Books, Front Street Books in Scituate Harbor or by calling 617-697-2115. You may also purchase tickets at the door. Grab family and friends and come to one musical and wonderful event that everyone will enjoy!

HATS ON DISPLAY

Check out the Historical Society's summer hat exhibit located at the Pratt Building and is open Monday thru Friday from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Sixty hats are on exhibit spanning from the 1860s to the 1960s. It is a fascinating display and worth the time to go and visit.

That is all for this week. All news should be sent in no later than Tuesdays by 5 pm.

Students celebrate trees with songs

The Annual Arbor Day Celebrations were held recently at Osgood and Deer Hill schools. The children assembled with their teachers outside the school and began the program with the Pledge of Allegiance and a beautiful rendition of the opening song, "All American You and Me."

The children then quietly listened as Principal Janet Sheehan welcomed their parents and friends to the celebration. Sheehan spoke about the importance of Arbor Day and introduced guest speaker, Mary Eisenhaure, the President of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. Eisenhaure introduced a giant "Treeture," who paid a special visit to Cohasset for the day. The "Treeture," played by Garden Club member, Judy Dickstein magically appeared after the children chanted in unison the words "plant a tree!"

The children were asked if they knew why they thought trees were so important, to which one child thoughtfully replied "because they relieve stress!" Eisenhaure explained that in lieu of planting a tree at the Osgood, the Community Garden Club donated a Donald Wyman Crabapple tree, which has been planted in the Deer Hill courtyard to replace an older tree that died last winter.

The program also included a special tribute and fond farewell to Mrs. Jeanne Free, who retired in June after 24 years of dedicated service in Cohasset.

To close the program, the children performed a wonderful medley of songs. All in all, the celebration was as the second grade proclaimed in song, "A Perfect Summer Day."

Neighborhood watch

Cohasset is off the beaten path, which could explain why our town has not seen the number of housebreaks and car break-ins that have plagued neighboring towns, like Hingham.

But no matter how "tucked away" Cohasset is, it is not immune to crime and did experience a recent "breaking and entering" in the nighttime on Beechwood Street when the residents were at home, asleep.

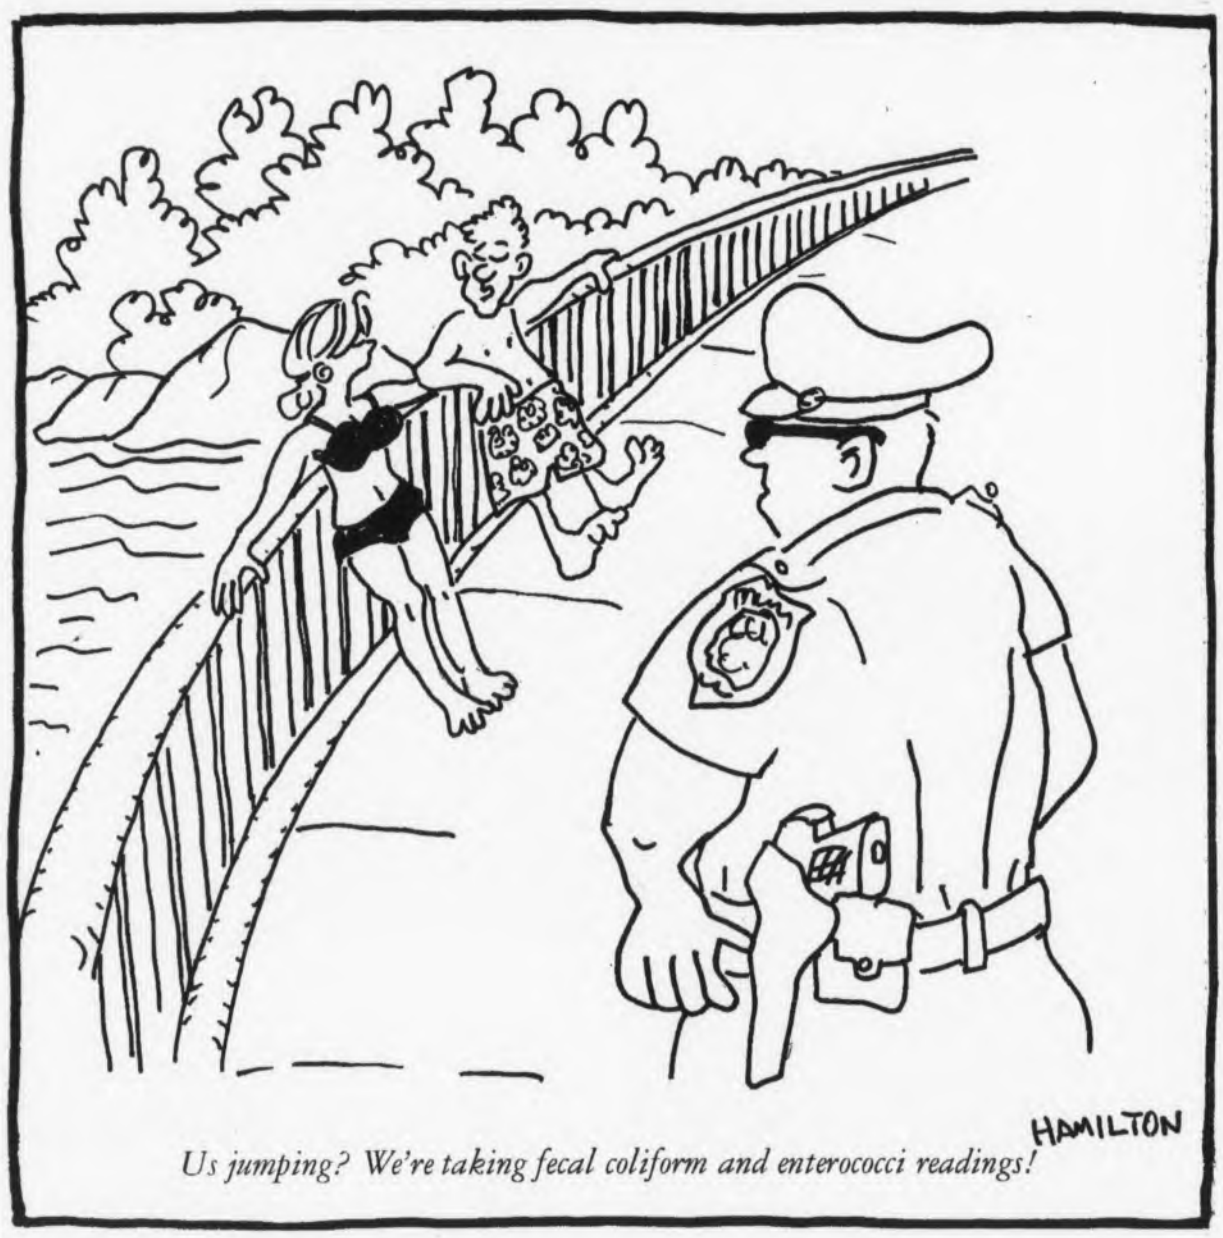
Home invasions of any type are upsetting and can leave the residents feeling violated, afraid, and angry. But brazen thieves entering homes at night when people are sleeping are the most frightening because of the potential for a confrontation with the homeowner or homeowner's family.

Therefore, it is critically important for residents to report anything that is out of the ordinary to the police — even the sound of a dog barking if that is unusual for the time of day or night.

As citizens, sometimes we hesitate to call police because we do not want to bother them and think perhaps what we have observed is really nothing at all.

However, police will tell you right away that they are paid to be bothered by concerned citizens. In fact tips from members of the public – who can be the eyes and ears for police when they are not there — can help stop crimes ranging from drunk drivers to potential burglaries.

A cell caller alerted police to an erratic driver last week who turned out to be operating without a license, an "arrestable" offense.



This past week in Hingham, two residents in separate incidents alerted police to the unusual. At 1:40 a.m., one saw two young people enter her neighbor's open garage and open the car door; the other resident called dispatch at 3:30 a.m. after hearing a car alarm sounding and witnessing two youths running down the street. Both incidents were reported in the middle of the night and the witnesses provided police with as much detail as possible.

Sadly the suspects in these crimes were not out-of-towners but were all "home grown" teenagers from Hingham and Cohasset. In both cases these youths are now facing the serious felony charges of breaking and entering in the nighttime and receiving stolen property.

As a deterrent against a potential burglary, we all also need to lock our cars and lock our doors and windows, even when we are at home. If it is hot, there are devices sold at hardware stores that allow a window to be open partway but will not allow it to be opened wide enough for someone to crawl through.

Feeling safe at home is key to our quality of life. We should not be lulled into a false sense of security because we live in such a beautiful, quiet town.

We have a highly trained and dedicated police force ready to help. Give police a call if you see or hear something and provide as much information as you can. It is a good way to keep drunk drivers off our roads and thieves out of our neighborhoods.

Us jumping? We're taking fecal coliform and enterococci readings!

Readers Advisory Network

The Cohasset Mariner is building a Readers Advisory Network of e-mail addresses so we can more frequently involve our readers in the content of the newspaper. Readers, who join the network, may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, for a digital "person on the street" interview, or for a community commentary.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the network, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. She will answer any questions that you may have. The Mariner promises to remove you immediately from the Readers Advisory Network if you request that we do.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cohasset Police Association treats our seniors!

On behalf of the Board of Cohasset Elder Affairs and Cohasset's Senior Citizens, I would like to thank the Cohasset Policemen's Association for the wonderful First Annual Father's Day Cook-out that they hosted at the Senior Center on June 12.

Starting at 7:30 a.m. with Lisa Matos (arriving in a truck) the fun began. Food was unloaded, the grill arrived and at noontime more than 70 seniors were provided with a delicious and abundant meal. Our policemen/women cooked, served and cleaned smiling all the while. Tom Wigmore and Jim Armstrong could be professional chefs.

A highlight for all of us was when Chief Hussey introduced officers and gave a brief biography and told us their position in the department. One senior was heard to say — "I feel so safe."

Our thanks also to Diane Kennedy and the members of the Cohasset Cultural Council for awarding CEA a grant which allowed us to present professional actor, Richard Clark, in performing, "And Now — Mark Twain" following the delightful lunch. All who attended had a wonderful time. It was also great to have so many of the Chanticleers and Old Goats in attendance.

As I am completing my first year as the Director of Cohasset Elder Affairs, I would like to thank every community agency and in particular, the South Shore Playhouse Associates, for your wonderful support of our seniors. This is a small town filled with people with large hearts.

Linda Elworthy
Director of Cohasset Elder Affairs.

Changes that matter are the hardest

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JoAnn Mirise

There is tremendous discomfort involved in breaking old ways, which are often rooted in habit, convenience and entitlement.

A number of years ago I signed my parents up for a fruit-of-the-month club as a gift for Christmas. I got a call one late spring day from my mother who wanted some advice on how to eat a papaya, a fruit she had never tried before. She grew up during a time when people ate what they could grow nearby, so trying food from far away places quite often made her suspect.

I suggested a drizzle of lime and a sprinkle of salt, and wished her luck. I later found out she invited the neighbor ladies, also new to papaya, over for a sample. It seemed that trying out the unknown was better done with friends.

These were the same ladies with whom, over the years, my mother shared many a kitchen table conversation as my sisters and I listened in. Laughter filled the table. Food was shared. Stories were told of the ups and downs of life. Tips on gardening, cooking and canning were weaved in along the way. I wouldn't know it then, but these are some of my most memorable and comforting experiences.

For a long time, I never quite understood why some people, especially those from my parent's and grandparent's generation, never ventured far from their local influences and simple ways. As for me, I couldn't get far enough away in order to try new things. The reason, I now realize was simply because I could, and they couldn't.

It seems unreal to think it has only been about 40 years since refrigeration, agribusiness, the national highway system, and air travel blurred the natural boundaries of geography and culture. Also during this time, the economy flourished due to unrenewable cheap energy (oil), and established a massive middle class that could take advantage of these once excessively expensive options. And take advantage we do. In fact, it seems it's what we do better than any other nation, to the point that we now mentor emerging countries in our shortsighted, unsustainable ways.

People often ask me what it is that we can do to make the biggest impact on improving our world and protecting our environment. Without hesitation I answer "Live more locally." By choosing to live, work, shop and run our daily life closer to where we call hcome, we can deeply effect the rate at which we are using up our natural resources and contributing to global warming.

With the single initiative of living locally we directly address two of the biggest areas of environmental offense and energy overconsumption, which are transportation and agriculture. And at the same time we can precipitate positive changes in so many other areas such as community, local economy and personal health.

As much as I am all for the incremental changes we are trying to incorporate into our lives such as replacing our light bulbs, driving hybrids, carrying reusable bags, buying Energy Star appliances etc., I would be failing as a steward of this movement if I suggested this was even close to enough. Trying to "green" our current system of growth-at-any-cost and rampant consumerism only perpetuates the problem. We should be envisioning alternatives that don't have the same liabilities. One of my favorite quotes from a popular writer on energy topics is "Would the USA be a better place if we could run Wal-Mart and Las Vegas on wind power? I don't think so."

But the big changes that really matter are the hardest ones to implement. There is tremendous discomfort involved in breaking

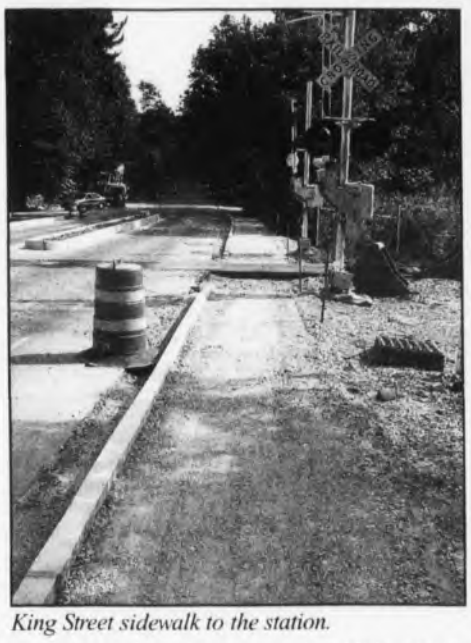
Street work at Lower King finishing up

MAKING TRACKS



TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush – CBB should be finishing up the street work at Lower King Street shortly. The new traffic light is poised for operation and the preparation for sidewalks at the Forest/Main/King intersection is complete. The MBTA is constructing (at our expense) the portion of sidewalk from the Forest/Main intersection across the tracks, including a special pedestrian crossing, to Laugelle Lane. This fall, the Town will be constructing the remainder of the sidewalk to the station.

We have spoken several times about the bicycle hazard at the North Main Street railroad crossing near Woodside Cemetery. Due to the shallow angle of the road to the tracks, the flange way (the groove in the crossing that accommodates the flanges on the train wheels) captures the skinny bike tires and generally causes bikes to stop instantly and possibly flip the rider over the handlebars. As you can imagine this is a serious danger for bike riders. There have been numerous bike accidents here, even with the large illuminated warning signs no either side of the crossing. We suppose that the reason the signage is not effective is that bike riders tend to ride with their heads down. One resident has added a bit of local flavor with their own sign posted at the crossing.

Work continues at the station with lots more to be done. We have added a photo of the view up the ramp that will lead from the parking lot to the station platform. Due to the fact that there is a vernal pool right in front of the platform, the walk from the edge of the parking lot to the platform will be fairly lengthy to go around the vernal pool. The ramp in the photo is on the platform side of the vernal pool and connects the platform it o the parking lot sidewalk.

At Beechwood Street, the Water Department is working to upgrade the water lines. It is unfortunate that they must tear up the new MBTA paving. But, we also just found out that there may be a problem with the MBTA's work at the crossing that could require them to do additional digging as well. So, look for quite a bit more construction at this crossing.

Revitalization – Near Flemings on the edge of Elm Street there are two electric poles. One is a new pole and the other the old one that needs to be removed. But, there is a rub. If you look up at the top of the old pole you will see lots of equipment mounted there. What you are looking at are three transformers that are used exclusively to provide the electrical power for Tedeschi's. These transformers need to be moved from the old pole to the new pole, before the old pole can be removed. But, cutting the power off to Tedeschi's during business hours "is not a good thing." So, we have worked with the power company and they will make the change-over next Friday, July 6th at 11p.m. That way, no customers will be inconvenienced and all the refrigerator doors will be closed, maintaining the internal temperature and protecting Tedeschi's inventory.

Station ramp under construction.

Mentioning the unmentionables

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

However, there's just something so un-La Perla about bidding for "unmentionables" on an auction site...

Did you know that you could buy underwear on eBay? This was news to me until I discovered that the only place to find my all-time favorite, now-discontinued line of "unmentionables" was from an eBay retailer. The thought of having to actually find something new was daunting, and that was how I found myself surfing the web in hopes of discovering some store with a leftover cache.

Now, I'm a reluctant shopper in general and would've put the whole endeavor off longer, but my mother was adamant that if I ever got in an accident, I wouldn't want anyone to see the sad, sad state of my undergarments. Frankly, I used to not care; but on my last trip to the emergency room straight from the soccer field, I found I was less worried about my knee than the fact that the cute ER doc had to touch my unshaved leg.

Unfortunately, my joy at getting some hits on Google for the right make and model was short-lived when the only available options were on eBay. Now, I know that eBay features actual retailers and that it's not always used stuff. However, there's just something so un-La Perla about bidding for "unmentionables" on an auction site. It's not only one gigantic step below the Victoria Secret's clearance sale catalog; but it feels too personal, as if somebody is literally going through their underwear drawer and mailing it to me. Now it might not bother most people, but the only underwear I want to touch besides mine would be those owned by people I've given birth to, and even then it's questionable on occasion.

So, while I was trying to decide whether I should bid, I was interrupted by an important call concerning someone else's "unmentionables." Apparently, one of my single mom friends, upon her daughter's return from a visit with her father, had found an extra piece of clothing in her child's suitcase: a pair of female underwear (adult-sized) that must have gotten mixed up in the wash. (Note to friend: ex-husband does get extra credit for actually sending the child home with clean laundry!)

"Granny panty or thong?" This was my first question.

"Granny, definitely Granny."

"Size?"

"Larger than mine," replied my very relieved friend.

Now, my first reaction, which is not always my most mature one, was to mail it back to her ex with a note enclosed saying, "I see London, I see France, I've seen your girlfriend's underpants." Fortunately for my friend, we were able to convene a few more single parents to discuss other alternatives. We dismissed selling it on eBay (yet another suggestion from Yours Truly); or sending the child back with a leopard-print thong in her suitcase. We all agreed that it violates all single parenthood ethics to ever use your child as a go-between for anything (Note to Alec Baldwin: this includes misplaced anger, too!). Besides, the new girlfriend was probably not worth the price of a good piece of lingerie. My friend ultimately decided to simply throw the panties out and make no mention of them.

Her reasoning? Retaliation in any form is short-lived, but taking the high road will mean that from this point forward, whenever she gets annoyed with her ex, she would have the solace of knowing that her replacement wears granny panties in a size larger than her. As for me, I hope that given the same circumstances I, too, would choose the high road; but in the meantime, I'm still here waiting to see if I'm the highest bid on eBay. Just in the off chance that I ever run in to that cute ER doc again.

Diane K. Danielson is a Cohasset resident and the CEO of DowntownWomensClub.com. Her new book, The Savvy Gal's Guide to Online Networking (or What Would Jane Austen Do?) will be published later this summer. You can catch more of her random musings on her blog at www.womensDISH.com.

HEALTH NOTES

Increasing awareness about skin cancer

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Five years ago in July, Health Notes ran a column on skin cancer. It contained a quiz asking questions about your risk factors for getting skin cancer and assigning scores for the answers; factors like hair and eye color, whether you had freckles, do you have an inside or outside job. The intent was to demonstrate that some people are more susceptible to skin cancer than others. Generally those who are more susceptib1e: spend a lot of time in the sun or have been sunburned; have light-colored skin, hair and eyes; have a family member with skin cancer; or are over age 50.

Over the 5 years since our last report, statistics on the war against skin cancer have changed:

- Expected deaths from skin cancer in 2002 were 9600; in 2007, 8110
- New cases of invasive melanoma expected in 2002 were 53,000; in 2007, 108,230

The figures tell us two things: that more people are getting the message about skin cancer, and that it's possible to reduce mortality if the symptoms are recognized and early treatment obtained. A third fact: after age 50, many parts of the human body don't work as well, including the skin in its role as a protection from sun. Therefore checks are required more often.

Exposure to ultraviolet radiation of the sun is the most important factor in determining a person's risk of skin cancer. Persons susceptible to moles or brown spots, may have a predisposition to melanoma or mole cancer, the most serious form of skin cancer. Suspicious moles can be observed using:

Exposure to ultraviolet radiation of the sun is the most important factor in determining a person's risk of skin cancer

The "ABCD" of dangerous mole detection:

- Asymmetry - The shape of one half does not match the other
- Border - Edges are often ragged, notched, blurred or irregular in outline
- Color - The color is uneven. Shades of black, brown and tan may be present
- Diameter - There is a change in size, usually an increase.

Experienced skin specialists may be able to distinguish moles, which are precursors to cancer, and those with light skin and hair or other risk factors may want to be checked. Those with few risk factors may only need to get regular checkups from their doctor.

In 2002, we also used sunscreen differently. Then, Sun Protection Factor (the SPF on the label) of 30 was recommended. Increasingly, with the increase in melanoma, sunscreens have improved and the available SPF numbers have gone higher. Now 45 is not uncommon if unattractive when applied. Accordingly, sunless tanning has become popular and lotions are being sold as more effective and safer in creating a tanned look than staying out in the dangerous old sun. The problem is that most people are exposed to the sun and without the protection of a reasonably high SPF number, they are at some risk. A recent survey has found that, although sunless tanning lotions will give one a tan lasting about a week, any sun blockage within the lotion itself only lasts until the next showerbath or water immersion. Moreover, less than half of these sunless tanners profess to have any blockage at all. And only a fraction of them contain an SPF number. The Food and Drug Administration has mandated that sun-tanning preparations containing no sunscreen have a warning label. Response to such labeling has been spotty. Either the warning was not present or the label was almost invisible and only a few more than half even complied. And so the trend has been to go with a more potent blocker, but to use it less frequently, or to use a skin dye and hope for a miracle.

Some things change and some don't: In 2002, Dr. Kenneth Reed, a local dermatologist spoke about sunscreen. His recommendation: Use SPF 30, and everybody, especially children, will have less risk later on in life if the first application is rubbed in at least 15 minutes before going outside and reapplied every few hours if they are sweating or swimming. Good advice today.

No respite from Paris

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I first heard of Paris Hilton a few years ago when a friend of mine told me she and her boy friend du jour were performing on a sex tape that was playing the Internet circuit and I'd better get cracking and critique it before it wore out. The tape, not Paris.

I did and, as one who has been known to surf Cinemax in the early morning hours for a Shannon Tweed marathon, frankly I was disappointed. The notorious Paris Hilton sex tape would never win an Academy Award. Unless, of course, Larry Flynt was on the voting panel.

Since then, I don't recall picking up a newspaper or a magazine or tuning in to CNN or the Fox Channel without seeing Paris — fully clothed, well, partly — acting (?) with Nicole Ritchie in "The Simple Life," or doing whatever it is that the beautiful people do when they have too much booze, money and time on their hands.

I thought I was going to have a respite from Paris when she went into the slammer and managed to smuggle word out to Barbara Walters that she had found God and was turning her life around, all the little things that prisoners read from cue cards after the cell door closes behind them.

Barbara thought she had locked up the first interview with Paris after she left the joint but the ex-con fooled Babs as well as Dianne Sawyer and Greta Van Whatshername by appearing on CNN to answer the penetrating questions of Larry King.

"The whole thing somehow was beneath me," sniffed Barbara.

I don't usually watch Larry King because most of the time there is something pretty good on HBO at 9 o'clock but this time I did because I felt the need to learn how Paris found God when she and the Deity are not known to hang out in the same places, also I wanted to hear her voice, the sex tape lacking audio.

I knew the interview was going to be good, if not necessarily accurate, when Paris described the prison strip search as "the most humiliating experience of my life. Doing that in front to someone you don't even know. It's pretty embarrassing." At another point in the interview, Paris, whose 23 days in the slam grew out of a conviction for driving under the influence, told Larry with a straight face that she never uses drugs, doesn't drink a lot and really shouldn't be tagged with the party girl label. Larry appeared to be too stunned to ask a follow up the question.

About a half hour into the interview, I sensed that Larry had used up all the questions he had planned and was now winging it. "A couple more segments to go," he said to no one in particular. He seemed to be resisting the urge to look at his watch.

That's when I cut away to Cinemax. Maybe they were showing an old Shannon Tweed movie.

Cohasset Tri set for Sunday

athletes must test their bodies and minds.

Simms always did a lot of running, but got into triathlons about 10 years ago. Then, "one thing led to another" and he began to train for Ironman triathlons. Now, at age 52, he doesn't plan on curbing his Ironman competitions any time soon.

"You learn about your own personal limits, it's an interesting exploration — cuts down on the psychiatric bills," Simms jokes, "it's not all masochistic suffering that crazy people do," rather it is a personal test of endurance, he says.

The Ironman race got its start on the Hawaiian island of Oahu in 1978. Now, Ironman triathlons are held all over the world. An Ironman race begins with a 2.4-mile swim, then a 112-mile bike and concludes with a 26.2- mile marathon run.

In comparison, the Cohasset Triathlon is considered a short distance triathlon at 15 miles combining the swim, bike and run legs. But the shorter distance presents it's own set of challenges to overcome and tricks an athlete can do to improve their performance.

"You can do pretty well in a triathlon if you're mediocre at all three events," says Simms, the reason being no major time is lost in any one leg. A collegiate swimmer's athleticism doesn't always translate to great runner or cyclist, he says, which may put them at a slight disadvantage. But there are ways to make up bits of time along the way.

"One of the keys to short distance triathlons is the transitions," says Simms. An expeditious transition from the beach to the bicycle could cut minutes off a total time.

Each of a triathlon's three legs requires specific equipment. Given the coolness of the water many athletes will be wearing wetsuits on Sunday morning. Before they jump on their bicycle, they will need to locate it among hundreds of other bicycles, then shed their wetsuits and put on cycling footwear. After the 12.5-mile bike, athletes return to Sandy Beach to ditch their bikes and switch to running sneakers.

"Athletes should practice their transitions, it's easy time to pay attention to," and an extra minute gained there could spell the difference between a winning and losing time, says Simms.

Transitions isn't just about equipment, athletes also need to train their bodies to run after biking. Although both activities use leg muscles, the actions and muscles used are different.

"The first time you get off the bike and get ready to run, your legs are like leadweights," Simms says. But with a little training, your body can learn to adjust to the activity transition. The athlete should come out of the swim "feeling refreshed," says Simms, "for that first leg you want to swim efficiently and conserve energy," he advises.

When in peak training mode for an upcoming Ironman, swimming, biking and running becomes like a part-time job for him. Sessions add up to about 20 hours per week. He'll swim 100 laps in the South Shore YMCA pool or head up to Walden Pond with a wetsuit. Or do double sessions of swimming in the morning and running in the evening.

Ironman triathlete Rob Simms, who will compete on Sunday, says one of the keys to short distance triathlons is the transitions and an expeditious transition from the beach to the bicycle could cut minutes off a total time.

When race day comes, Simms tries to enjoy each part of the race as he's doing it, "I think of myself as a swimmer in the water, a biker on the bike and a runner while I'm running." He only begins to look ahead to the next leg as he completes the one he's in.

"It doesn't matter if you are in the best of shape, something could go wrong," says Simms, "but that's the fun part — the uncertainty."

Of course, like in the planning of the triathlon, being well prepared for race challenges helps. Weather is always an unknown until the day of the race, but athletes can train to be able to adapt to the conditions. Getting proper hydration during a race and getting proper nourishment is a must.

For those residents tinkering with the idea of participating in next year's Cohasset Triathlon, sign up early. Registrations were full by mid-April this year — three months before the race.

"Seek out advice from people who have done it, figure out a time and place to swim. It pays to have a coach to help organize training time and exercises," he advises newcomers to the sport.

"The popularity of triathlons is exploding," says Simms, whose wife will take on the Cohasset course as her first triathlon. The Cohasset Tri was particularly appealing because of its hometown location and its charitable element — all net proceeds and sponsorships will be donated to the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation.

"The Cohasset Triathlon is destined to become a classic," says Simms. With full capacity registrations in its first year, which is highly unusual, the Cohasset Triathlon is already well on its way to becoming a staple in the event calendar.

One-time bacteria spike closes beach

Black Rock beach re-opened Thursday

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"Historically, this is very unusual for this site."
— Health Inspector Tara Tradd

Summer is finally here. For many that means hitting the beach for some sun and water fun. Those doing just that at Black Rock beach on Tuesday afternoon were informed the beach was closed for swimming due to high bacteria levels. However, the water was re-sampled on that same day and the count came back significantly lower and the beach was re-opened on Thursday.

"Historically, this is very unusual for this site," said Health Inspector Tara Tradd. The beach is located in North Cohasset, near Hull's Atlantic Avenue. The open water beach is typically flushed with each tide.

Tradd sampled the water on Monday and sent the sample off to G&L Labs in Quincy. The results were 116 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters. If tests reveal a one-time "spike" of more than 104 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters of water beaches are closed. Tradd immediately went to the beach to post signs and inform beachgoers of the closure. One child complained his legs were burning.

Tradd re-sampled the water on Tuesday afternoon. The results came back "great" with an enterococci reading of less than 2.

Tradd hasn't been able to determine the cause for the atypical results earlier in the week. She consulted with Hull's board of health and its beaches were fine. But she said they did not take their samples until Tuesday when Tradd did the re-sample. Scituate did not sample until Thursday morning.

"If something was going on out there Monday would have been the day," said Tradd. When taking the sample on Monday, Tradd observed a boat off the beach and it is possible its head was left open or they discharged too close to the shore, she said.

The Board of Health takes weekly samples of the waters and beaches around town. The results are posted on the Health effects related to swimming in polluted waters could include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes. The most common ailment is gastro-intestinal disorders, stemming from swimmers swallowing water.

For more information on beach closures, please contact the board of health at (781) 383-4116.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. Beacon Hill Roll Call records local representatives' votes on three roll calls and local senators' votes on four roll calls from the week of June 25-29.

FOLD LOCAL PENSION SYSTEMS INTO STATE PENSION SYSTEM (H 4125)

House 134-17, approved and sent to the Senate legislation requiring the assets of 25 local and county pension systems to be folded into and managed by the state pension fund. The 25 systems do not meet the legislation's requirements to continue to operate their own systems. The bill provides for state management of any systems with earnings two percent or more lower than the state's pearcentage of return over the past ten years and which are not meeting newly-established parameters to pay off their unfunded liabilities. Current law allows but does not require all local pension systems to have a portion or all of their assets invested with the state fund. Supporters said that the legislation would increase the investment return for these underperforming local pension systems by an estimated $100 million and would lower property taxes in many of the affected communities. They noted that the $50 billion state pension fund is superbly managed and has more leverage with investment firms. They argued that these local systems would have generated an additional $700 million if they had been operated by the state over the past several years. Some opponents said that the legislation is another example of the state unnecessarily taking away power from local communities. Others noted that the proposal affects a small number of communities and would not generate sufficient extra revenue to lower property taxes. The Senate later on a voice vote, without a roll call, gave initial approval to its own version of the measure. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill requiring the assets of 25 local and county pension systems to be folded into and managed by the state pension fund. A "No" vote is against the bill).

REDUCE THE NUMBER OF LOCAL SYSTEMS FOLDED INTO THE STATE SYSTEM (H 4125) — Present

House 36-117, rejected an amendment that would reduce from 25 to 12 the number of local and county pension systems that would be folded into and managed by the state pension fund. The bill provides for state management of any systems with earnings two percent or more lower than the state's percentage of return over the past ten years and with funding of 65 percent or less of their unfunded liability. The amendment changes the funding formula and "captures" systems that have funded 60 percent instead of 65 percent of their unfunded state liability. Amendment supporters said that lowering this bar would allow 13 more systems to continue to run their own pension funds and not be taken over by the state. They argued that systems that are funded at 60 percent are on target and should not be punished. Amendment opponents said that the amendment waters down the bill and allows 13 underperforming systems to continue to be operated locally. They argued that the full 25 systems should be folded into the state's fund in order to generate more income and save taxpayers money. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment that would reduce from 25 to 12 the number of local and county pension systems that would be folded into and managed by the state pension fund. A "No" vote is against the reduction).

RENAME LEGISLATION "AN ACT RELATIVE TO UNDERPERFORMING PENSIONS FUNDS" (H 4125) — Present

House 18-133, rejected an amendment that would change the name of the pension fund legislation from "a bill to reduce the stress on local property taxes through enhanced pension fund investment" to "a bill relative to underperforming pension funds." Amendment supporters called for "truth in labeling" and said that the title of the bill is misleading and would result in voters believing that it would reduce property taxes in all cities and towns. They noted that the bill only applies to a few communities and does not even guarantee property tax relief in those communities. Amendment opponents said that this frivolous amendment is silly and is wasting the time of the House. They noted that there are more important matters to consider than this meaningless name change. (A "Yes" vote is for changing the name of the pension fund legislation to "a bill relative to underperforming pension funds." A "No" vote is against the name change).

DIVEST STATE FUNDS FROM COMPANIES CONDUCTING BUSINESS IN SUDAN (S 2255) — Y

Senate 36-0, approved and sent to the House a bill ordering the $50 billion state pension fund to divest itself of any investments in companies that do business in Sudan. Supporters said that this is a moral issue and urged the state not to help the Sudanese government fund its genocide campaign in Darfur that has killed up to 300,000 people and displaced up to two million from their homes. Michael Travaglini, executive director of the state's pension board, at a public hearing in March reluctantly opposed the bill. He noted that the board's main job is to maximize profits from investments but said that the board would quickly divest the funds if the proposal becomes law. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill ordering the $50 billion state pension fund to divest itself of any investments in companies that do business in Sudan).

DIVEST FROM ALL TERRORIST NATIONS (S 2255) — Y

Senate 8-28, rejected an amendment ordering the $50 billion state pension fund to divest itself of any corporation that does business with a government designated by the U.S. State Department as a sponsor of terrorism including Cuba, Iran, North Korea, Sudan and Syria. The amendment does allow investments in these corporations if a majority of the treasurer's investment advisory council votes to allow it. Amendment supporters said that they support the Darfur divestment but argued that is just as important to divest funds from these four other terrorist nations. They noted that these five nations are among the most dangerous in the world and should not be rewarded by the state of Massachusetts. Some amendment opponents said that they would support the expanded divestiture but urged that the Senate wait until bills dealing separately with this expansion issue are considered later in the year. Others said that Darfur divestment comes first because there is genocide taking place. Some indicated that no research has been done to determine how much money the expanded divestiture would cost the pension fund. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment divesting the state's pension fund of any corporation that does business with the five terrorist nations. A "No" vote is against the amendment and supports only the Sudan divestiture).

DIVEST FROM IRAN (S 2255) — Y

Senate 7-29, rejected an amendment requiring the state's pension fund to divest its holdings in companies doing business with Iran. This restriction would be in addition to the Darfur divestiture. Amendment supporters said that Iran is the most evil nation in the world and should not receive any support from Massachusetts' pension fund. They noted that Iran is working toward developing a nuclear bomb and has threatened to destroy Israel. Amendment opponents repeated their prior arguments and urged that the Senate to wait until a bill dealing separately with the Iran issue is considered later in the year. They indicated that no research has been done to determine how much money the expanded divestiture would cost the pension fund. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment requiring the state's pension fund to divest its holdings in companies doing business with Iran. A "No" vote is against the amendment and supports only the Sudan divestiture).

ALLOW CITIES AND TOWNS TO JOIN STATE HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN (S 2279) — Y

Senate 35-0, approved its own version of a House-approved bill allowing cities and towns to enroll their local employees in the Group Insurance Commission (GIC) - the state-operated group insurance plan. Supporters said that the bill would give local employees better coverage and a wider choice of lower cost plans that would be negotiated by the state which has increased purchasing power. They noted that it would also save cities and towns administrative costs. The House approved a different version of the bill and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill allowing cities and towns to enroll their local employees in the state-operated group insurance plan).

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by Cohasset Historical Society.

It's officially summer and the parking lot at Sandy Beach is filled with cars. During the week you will find mothers and children escaping the heat, building sandcastles and wading in the chilly ocean. It seems as though not much has changed from the 1930s when these photographs were taken at Sandy Beach, except the bathing suits!

As the Society plans its summer of 2008 exhibit we need your help. Do you have a yellow polka dot bikini (or any other bathing suit that recalls the past) that you would like to donate to the Society's textile collection? If so, please contact us at 781-383-1434.

Also, please call if you can identify these bathing beauties.

old ways, which are often rooted in habit, convenience and entitlement. Today at the grocery, I chose to put a lovely Forelle pear back on the shelf when I read that it came from South Africa. I wanted that delicious looking pear. But really, is a pear worth the resources it took to get the 7,800 miles to Hingham, Mass.? Think of all the spewing emissions from whatever combination of jet, container ship and truck that it took to make the trip.

I chose to put back the pear. I witness people making these types of choices every day. If we all made these choices together, with intention and consistency, we might actually have a chance of protecting our ability to choose at all.

MIAA to move softball pitching rubber 3 feet back for next season

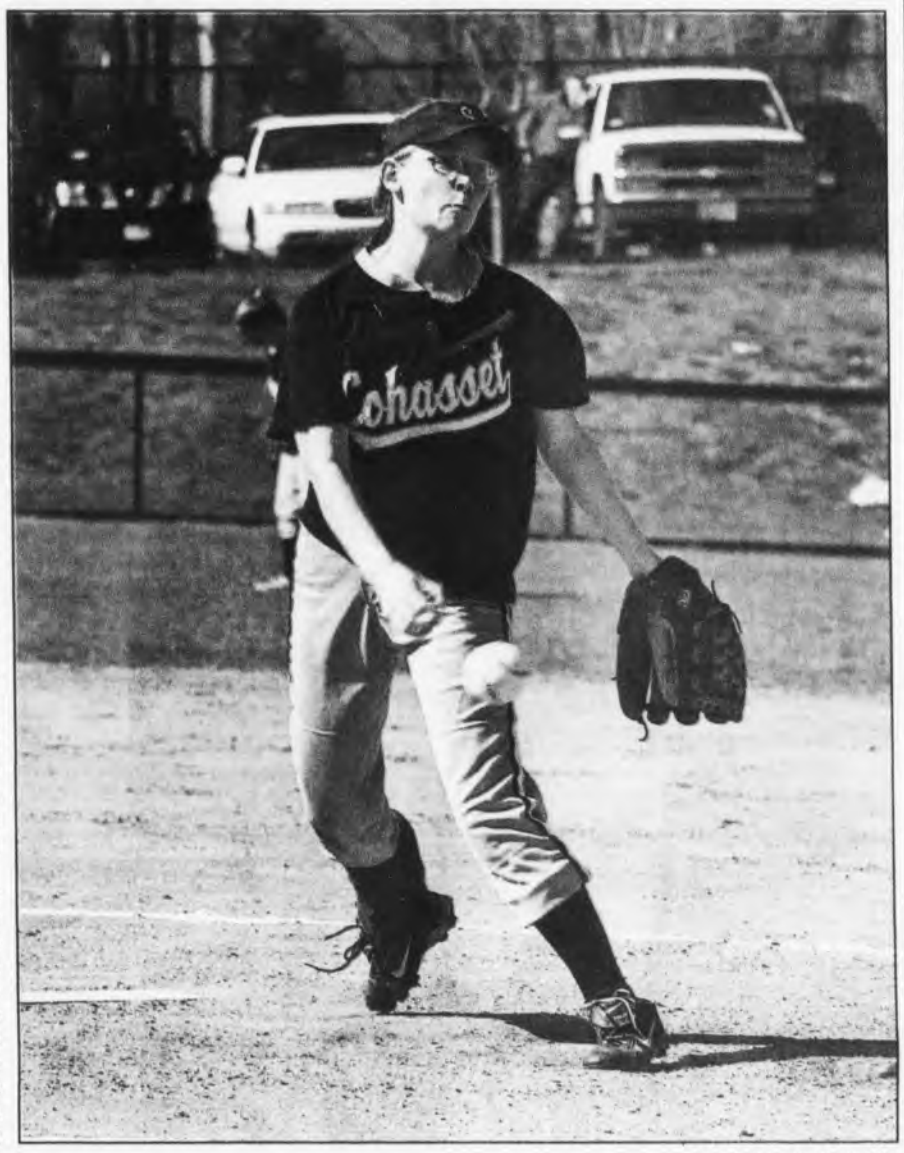
By Nick French
NFRENCH@CNC.COM

Now that the high school softball season is over many kids will put the gloves and bats away until next spring, but for the pitchers of local high school teams it is time to get to work on a new challenge.

Last month the MIAA voted to move the pitching rubber back three feet, from 40 to 43 feet, in an effort to improve safety for the pitchers.

The distance at the collegiate level is 43 feet, and every summer there are high school seniors who go to work in preparing for the extra three feet.

Five years ago Abington's Kaitlyn Gambino was an all-scholastic hurler who was preparing for a career at Bridgewater State. She said the extra three feet wasn't as big an adjustment as she thought it would be, but it required a lot more work.



As a high school pitcher she said she pitched a lot with her upper body, but learned how to use her legs more in preparing for the longer distance, she threw and ran five times a week the summer before college, but it paid off as she was the conference rookie of the year as a freshman, leading the league in ERA and wins, while earning first team all-conference honors.

"Going from 40 to 43 feet was an adjustment but it wasn't as bad as I anticipated. I ended up not minding the 43 feet," she said.

Today she is a pitching instructor on the South Shore, and will be directly involved with a lot of girls who will be making the adjustment on the high school level.

She says many girls have the same problem she did in high school, not using their legs enough, which can cause injury.

"I teach about 30 different girls right now and a lot of them come to me not knowing how to correctly use their lower half to gain power. I do a lot of drills with my girls now that I learned in college. If they start at an early age using their legs with a pitch they are going to save their rotator cuff," she said.

Cohasset's Virginia Spofford pitches to a Carver opponent during a game this spring. Beginning next season, the high school softball pitching rubber will move back from 40 to 43 feet away from home plate.

"You are not going to see scores go from 1-0 to 10-8. You might see a pitchers duel at 3-2 but the pitchers will still have all the control of the game from 43 feet away."

Rich Paulhus, Framingham State head softball coach

In 1985 the NCAA decided to move the pitching rubber from 40 to 43 feet to promote more offense, not safety purposes. It's still a pitching dominant game, and was for a long time, but the offenses are starting to catch up.

"You are not going to see scores go from 1-0 to 10-8. You might see a pitchers duel at 3-2 but the pitchers will still have all the control of the game from 43 feet away," Framingham St. head softball coach Rich Paulhus said. "I think there will be some advantage to pitchers who can throw everything. The extra distance will help move their pitches (drops, curves, rises). The kids who rely on just a 40 feet fastball will need to work harder and develop.

Most of the breaking pitches, such as the drop, the curve, and the rise will move more with the extra three feet, because of the spin on the ball, so the consensus among most is that the being a well rounded pitcher who has multiple pitches to go to will give a pitcher the best chance to succeed from the further distance.

There's no doubt the college coaches in the area are a little happier about the rule. Bringing in a Massachusetts high school pitcher to a Division II or III school will make for an easier transition to the college game, and during the recruiting process they'll be able to see them from the college distance.

All-Scholastic softball team

Cohasset's Christina Pinkus among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and we do feel secure that we chose the top public school softball players for this honor.

It should be noted due to the large number of athletes in the Community Newspaper Company region, we split the athletes into two teams for softball: North and South. This is the Community Newspaper Company North softball squad comprised of athletes from Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Silver Lake, Pembroke, Cohasset and Duxbury.

Next week: baseball.

Christina Pinkus – Senior Pitcher/First base – Cohasset

There was little that Pinkus didn't do in leading Cohasset to the Div. 3 South semifinals…On the mound, the lefty won nine games, saved two more, and struck out 120 batters in 111 innings while compiling a 1.80 ERA…The numbers get even Winning nine games and batting .500 were among the many contributions Christina Pinkus made to Cohasset's sectional semifinal season.

Cohasset's Eliza Murphy, 11, was the Junior singles champion at the Scituate Town Tennis Tournament on June 23.

Little Leaguers on a roll

Still undefeated in District 8 play

Cohasset now advances to the final four of the winners bracket in District 8. The next opponent will be Weymouth American on tonight (July 6) in Stoughton at 6 p.m.

Once again it took all 12 players for the Cohasset Williamsport Little League team to beat a very solid Milton National squad, 4-1, in Saturday's District 8 winners bracket action.

Connor Goetz took the mound and threw a complete game four-hitter, striking out 12. Other standouts for Cohasset include Shane Haggerty and Nick Tangherlini, as both hit home runs. For Tangherlini, it was his second of the competition.

Jamie Timothy singled home Christian Davis in the first, after Davis' lead off double. Connor O'Brien beat out an infield single in the fifth and scored on a Tangherlini single.

Defensively, when Goetz was not striking out the Milton batters, Mike O'Brien, Tangherlini and Haggerty were solid for Cohasset. But it was first baseman Kyle Healy who came up with the play of the game in the top of the sixth. Milton got its leadoff hitter, and the next batter squibbed a roller down third, and the throw over Healy's head at first. He quickly retrieved the errant throw and threw out the runner trying to advance to second.

Goetz took matters into his own hands and struck out the last two batters.

The players and coaches appreciate the support from a large contingent of Cohasset fans, friends and family. Cohasset now advances to the final four of the winners bracket in District 8. The next opponent will be Weymouth American on tonight (July 6) in Stoughton at 6 p.m.

Directions to Elm Street fields in Stoughton

Take Route 3 north and merge onto I-93 south. On 93, take exit 4 (on the lefthand side) to Route 24 south. On 24, take exit 20B and merge onto Route 139 west toward Stoughton. After three miles, turn right onto Washington Street. After one-tenth of a mile, turn left at Route 27. After three-tenths of a mile, turn left onto School Street. After seven-tenths of a mile, bear right onto Elm Street.

Entrance to the fields will be on your left.

better at the dish: .500 batting average, six home runs and 25 RBI…Drove in three runs and got the win on the mound in Skippers' postseason-clinching win over Holbrook…Pitched a three-hitter in Skippers' 1-0 tournament loss to eventual sectional champion West Bridgewater…Pinkus will play on scholarship for Div. 1 Wagner College in Manhattan…Said Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick after the season: "She's an incredible softball player and we'll miss her very much next season."

Kelsea Cheney – Sophomore
Shortstop – Abington

While she comes from good lineage, her sister Britney was a star shortstop for the Green Wave, Kelsea has made a name for her own this year as one of the most feared hitters, and best defensive shortstops in the area…This season she helped lead the Green Wave to a 16-4 record, and a berth in the sectional semifinals. While being named a South Shore League all-star…She batted .472 this season with 11 RBI and a home run…Her biggest hit of the year came in the win over Hanover when she belted a two RBI double…She's also a standout basketball and soccer player for the Green Wave earning League all-star honors in both.

Kerri McDonough – Freshman
Pitcher – Abington

Pitching was a question mark at the start of the year, but it was soon discovered that head coach Steve Kingman has the answer in the circle for another few years…McDonough burst onto the scene and carried the Green Wave to a sixth straight South Shore League title, and a berth in the south sectional semifinals…Her best game came in the extra inning win over Hanover where she got out of a bases loaded jam in the seventh inning, before her team won it in the eighth…On the year she was 14-4 with a 1.59 ERA while earning South Shore League all-star honors…When she's not playing softball she's also a member of the soccer and basketball team's in Abington… She can only get better as she learns how to pitch and should be a force in the circle for years to come.

Treasa O'Neil – Senior
Catcher – Abington

There was nobody coach Steve Kingman wanted up the bat more than O'Neil in a tight situation…She was Ms. Clutch for the Green Wave this year, coming up with four game winning hits, and numerous others that started rallies, and put runs on the board in the early innings…Her toughness was never questioned, and in the tournament she badly sprained her ankle against Hanover and caught the semifinal game with a hockey puck on the bottom of her shoe. ..She batted .420 on the year, while leading the team in RBI and was the perfect batterymate for a freshman pitcher…She was also a star basketball player for the Green Wave this winter...She's an honor roll student who will attend Worcester St. next fall.

Liz DiMascio – Sophomore
Pitcher – Braintree

Followed impressive freshman campaign with an even better sophomore season, earning All-Scholastic and Bay State Conference All-Star first team nods in both years…Went 10-3 with a 0.54 ERA this spring, striking out an unbelievable 165 batters in 90 innings; included in those numbers was a no-hitter against Weymouth…Tossed a two-hit shutout with 12 K's in Div. 1 South first round win over Wareham, and struck out 11 hitters the next night in a tough luck 2-0 loss to eventual sectional finalist New Bedford…Won back-to-back 1-0 decisions against Duxbury and Archbishop Williams in the Wamps' Memorial Day Classic…Served as a team tri-captain despite being only a sophomore…DiMascio also plays volleyball for BHS

Laura McDonough – Sophomore
Shortstop – Braintree

Stepped into the starting shortstop role this season and, needless to say, handled it quite well…Bay State Conference first-team All-Star hit third for the Wamps and batted .507 with two homers and 18 RBI, all team bests…One of those home runs was a key two-run blast in a 4-1 win over Newton North…Knocked in a pair of runs in 4-0 tournament victory over Wareham…In addition to her prowess at the plate, McDonough played an excellent shortstop, displaying good range and committing just one error in 22 games…One of Braintree's three captains this season, along with fellow All-Scholastics Liz DiMascio and Jacqui Saluti…The return of these three, and the rest of Braintree's roster, give the Wamps hope for building off this season's surprising 19-3 record

Jacqui Saluti – Junior
First base – Braintree

Another Wamp that excelled in her first season as a full-time starter, Saluti was named to the Bay State Conference All-Star first team this spring…Helped solidify the middle of Braintree's line-up with a .446 batting average that included two home runs (tied for the team lead) and 16 RBI (second on the Wamps)…Had four hits in a game against Brookline in May…Scored the lone run in Braintree's win over Archbishop Williams in the Wamps' Memorial Day Classic championship game…Saluti also wielded a solid glove at first base…Served as a tri-captain

Casey Ducinski – Sophomore
Pitcher – Duxbury

Had some big shoes to fill on the mound after pitching behind her sister last season but Ducinski was up for the challenge…Just a sophomore, the second-year varsity player was the leading pitcher in the Patriot League this season with a 0.71 ERA while going 13-7 and striking out 125 batters…Ducinski saw some action on the mound last season but primarily played in right field before going full-time this spring…The PL All-star picked up huge wins at Abington and Hanover and of her six losses, four were decided by a single run…Her consistency on the mound helped the Lady Dragons go 9-2 in the league, tying Silver Lake for the Keenan Div. title…The squad was 16-7 overall this spring, qualifying for the Div. 2 South tourney…Just as sophomore, Ducinski still has plenty of pitching to do at DHS.

Kayla Mackey – Junior
Shortstop – Duxbury

Made the difficult leap from first base to shortstop this season and did it virtually seamlessly…A two-year starter for the Lady Dragons, Mackey was dangerous on many levels…The team's cleanup hitter this season, Mackey boasted a .485 average for Duxbury, who were co-champs of the Patriot League's Keenan Div (9-2)…The junior was also among her team's RBI leaders with 21 on the spring…Was an essential part of a strong infield, rarely making an error at her very busy shortstop position…Her smooth play on the field helped the Lady Dragons go 16-6 in the regular season and qualify for postseason play in the Div. 2 South tourney…There, the squad was edged by Dedham…A PL All-star this season, Mackey returns to the field next spring.

Lesley Guenard – Junior
Shortstop – Hanover

A two-year starter at the shortstop position, Guenard led the Patriot League in hitting this season with a .548 average and three homeruns…The team's lead-off hitter, Guenard also had 12 RBI and stole 23 bases, helping the Lady Indians capture the PL Fisher Div. title (11-1)…To date, she has more than 100 hits for her career and is the first junior at Hanover to do so…The Lady Indians also boasted a very solid defense and Guenard was a major reason why…The junior rarely made errors this season from the very active shortstop position and was named to the PL All-star team for the third-straight year…Just a junior, Guenard will return to HHS as a three-sport captain in soccer, basketball, and softball next year.

Kristie DuVal – Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher – Hanover

Saw limited time over the last two years behind All-Scholastic Ashley Messina but stepped into the spotlight this season as the team's ace…DuVal surged through her first 11 games going undefeated before getting touched for a trio of losses down the stretch…But her strong pitching helped guide the Lady Indians to an 11-1 league record, winning the Fisher Div. title…Not an overpowering pitcher, DuVal's greatest strength was in her off-speed pitching and great changeup…The senior struck out more than 50 batters this season by keeping hitters off-balance…DuVal finished as the league's second-best hurler with a 1.25 ERA…Tossed a gem in a hard-luck eight-inning loss to rival Abington in the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South tourney, with Hanover finishing with an 18-4 record this spring…A field hockey and basketball player at HHS, DuVal leaves holes to fill on all three fields next year.

Michelle Montillio – Sophomore
Centerfield – Hanover

Used primarily as a pinch runner last spring, Montillio stepped into her starting role nicely this spring…Her great speed only added more depth to the top of Hanover's lethal lineup as Montillio hit behind Guenard (second in the order)…Montillio hit .534 for the Lady Indians this season, belting one homerun and driving in a dozen baserunners from the No. 2 spot in the order…Also a very solid defensive player, Montillio's quickness allowed her to cover a lot of ground in centerfield this spring…The Patriot League All-star's play was essential to Hanover's run to another league crown (11-1) in the Fisher Div., while the squad also reached the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South tourney…There, the Lady Indians were edged in 5-3 extra-inning decision despite a double from Montillio…Also a soccer and basketball player at HHS, Montillio returns to all three fields next year.

Katie Stanley – Sophomore
Pitcher – Silver Lake

Stanley is a major reason the Silver Lake softball finished the season 16-4 and atop the Patriot League West Division… She is just four wins shy of the Silver Lake school record of 28 wins with an entire two years to break the record…Stanley received a spot on this season's Patriot League All-Star team…Her pitching allowed the Lakers to qualify for the state tournament for the 17th consecutive season… "For two straight years we asked her to step up and get wins for us, and she's done that," head coach Mike Brennan said… "She's an outstanding player."

Mackenzie O'Dea – Junior
Second base – Weymouth

The resurgence of Weymouth softball that found the Wildcats in the tournament for the first time in 12 years had a lot to do with O'Dea…She batted .431 on the year, scoring 15 runs and driving in 13…led the team in hits, walks, and doubles, while being named the Bay State League Carey Division MVP and a first team all-conference selection…Her best game came in the tournament clincher against Newton North when she had three hits, two runs scored and an RBI…Defensively she was solid at second…She was a team captain as a junior, and will assume the same role next season…She is an honor roll student, and a class officer who also coaches in the Weymouth Youth League.

Jess Dion – Senior
Catcher – Weymouth

Numbers don't jump out when you look at this defensive specialist, but with catchers there are other more important things than batting average. Dion was a senior leader on a Wildcats squad that went to the tournament for the first time in 12 years, after coming so close the last two seasons…She was the Wildcats biggest source of power, and run producer, leading the team in triples, and RBI, with 15. She was also selfless enough to lead the team in sacrifice bunts…She was a four year starter and a Bay State league all-star this season…She's an honor roll student who earned the Weymouth youth softball league scholarship for her volunteer work coaching future Wildcats…Said Coach Kate Daley, "Statistics do not do justice to what Jess Dion brings to our team. She is our vocal leader, who calls pitches, and comes through in clutch situations."

Honorable Mention:

Cohasset's Fletcher Smalzel makes the throw to first during a game against Sacred Heart this spring. Next week, CNC announces its All-Scholastic baseball team.

Local gymnasts stand out at state championships

The Level 6 and Level 7 teams at Head Over Heels Gymnastics in Norwell had a great showing at their recent state championships. Both teams placed fourth in the state, with many individual and event champions.

In the Level 7 competition, Duxbury's Alex Watts took home the gold medal on the floor exercise in her age group, as well as fourth place on vault, second on bars and second in the all-around. Hingham's Lindsey Constantine also earned a gold medal on the floor exercise for her respective age category, as well as the silver on the vault. She placed sixth in the all-around.

Hanover's Kaitlyn Powers placed fourth on the uneven bars, floor exercise and all-around. Rebecca Saran of Pembroke took home the silver medal on bars for her age division and fifth in the all-around.

Other members of the fourth place Level 7 team included Duxbury's Alissa Watts, and Samantha Sprague and Madeline Ward, both of Norwell.

At the Level 6 meet, Pembroke's Jessica Gratzer was named Level 6 state champion, taking home the gold in the all-around and uneven bars, as well as third place on vault and floor exercise. Scituate's Boryana Doyle took home the bronze medal on the floor and placed sixth in the overall competition.

Elizabeth Mahoney of Hanson became the state uneven bar champion, taking home the gold in that event as well as earning fourth place in the all-around. Victoria Gately, also of Hanson, placed fourth on the uneven bars in her age division.

Jennifer Sullivan of Hanover was named Level 6 state floor exercise champion, taking home the gold on that event as well as third place on bars, fourth on beam and third in all-around.

Marshfield's Canyon Volpe placed third on the vault, second on floor, and fifth in the all-around. Other members of the fourth place Level 6 team include Kelsey Billings (Kingston), Taryn Urbanus (Quincy) and Kathryn Meschino (Hull).

Taking a step back

"It will make the transition easier when the kids go to college," Paulhus said.

But he also says that the actual transition shouldn't be too hard for those who are dedicated to throwing as much as possible to get used to the distance.

"I have my recruits use as much free time as possible during the summer to throw from 43 feet," Paulhus said. "Once Fall ball gets here, the pitchers are throwing everyday and adapt with little time."

Paulhus thinks the success pitchers have next year will be based on just how hard they work, an annual theme that doesn't really matter whether the mound is 40, 43, or 400 feet away.

"The girls that have a lot of strikeouts put a lot of hard work into their pitching and that is why they dominate. They are going to continue to put the hard work in no matter what distance they are throwing, so if they have the determination to succeed and be a dominating pitcher, they are going to do it no matter what distance you put them at."

One such pitcher is Taunton's Erin Wade, the Tigers captured the Division 1 state championship this year, with Wade in the circle, and should be front runners again.

Wade has pitched at 43 feet for her summer team and found little trouble.

"She liked it, her ball moved a lot more," Tiger head coach Dave Lewry said.

Lewry wonders about the lower levels though, particularly JV and freshmen who are coming up to the high school.

"There are so few eighth graders who can throw strikes I think the lower levels, they're going to get tattooed. I'm glad I'm not coaching freshmen."

Whatever the results are, it's sure to bring a big fervor come next spring, though after a season or two to get used to things it will probably become as natural as anything else in the game.

"Who knows, maybe a few years from now we'll forget we ever played at 40 feet," Lewry said.

SPORTS BRIEFLY

The Cohasset Recreation Commission is accepting registrations for the following summer sports schools and clinics. Each sport program has a separate brochure and registration sheet and all are available in the foyer of Cohasset Town Hall, right outside the recreation office.

Checks for each week-long sports opportunity is generally payable to the individual camp providing the service. For information call (781)383-4109.

Youth Lacrosse Clinic – This one-week clinic, for boys and girls entering grades 3 through 6 in the fall, will take place from 8 to 10 a.m., Monday, July 23 through Friday, July 27, at Milliken Field in Cohasset. While the program is run by the Cohasset Recreation Department, it is open to players from other communities. The Buick brothers will direct the program this year.

Sessions are held rain or shine in all conditions except lightning. Players need full equipment. Participating girls need a stick, goggles and a mouth guard. Participating boys will need a helmet, including a mouthpiece, gloves, arm and shoulder pads and a stick. Players should also take water, juice or sports drink to each day's session. The fee is $85.

Soccer Camp – South Shore Soccer Camp's week-long clinic for children ages 7 to 14 will be held from 9 to 4 p.m., Monday, July 30 through Friday, Aug. 3. The fee is $255 per participant with a $20 discount for the second child. The fee includes a camp shirt for each participant, available the first day of camp. Space is limited; early registration is advised.

Soccer Squirts – South Shore Soccer Camp's week-long Soccer Squirts Clinic for children ages 4 and 5 will run from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday, Aug. 1 through Friday, Aug. 5. The fee is $85 per participant and includes a camp shirt and appropriated-size soccer ball for each participant, both available the first day of camp. Space is limited; early registration is advised.

Town soccer registration

Registration for Cohasset Town Soccer is now open for the 2007-08 fall/spring season, for kids in grades pre-K through 8th. Register on line at www.cohassetsoccer.com

Cohasset Police Association serves up food, good will

Richard Clark, a professional actor, entertains the seniors with his impression of Mark Twain following lunch. Clark's visit was made possible with a grant from the Cohasset Cultural Council.

Linda Ellworthy, director of Elder Affairs, sports a Goofy hat while getting Cool Whip for the desserts. Linda said, "Days like this make me goofy!"

Madeline Hargadon takes a hot dog for herself from Police Officer Christy Tarantino during a barbecue at the Community Center that was sponsored by the Cohasset Police Association, a non-profit organization that sponsors events and scholarships.

Police Officer Christy Tarantino helps get the dessert ready by placing the biscuits for strawberry shortcakes on a tray held by Tom Wigmore.

Boston Pops program to benefit South Shore Art Center

Multiple Tony Award nominee Marin Mazzie joins Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops in a performance featuring well-known hits from Broadway musicals and Hollywood movies. The concert will be held at 7 p.m., Saturday, July 28, at the South Shore Music Circus and all ticket proceeds will support the exhibitions and education programs of the South Shore Art Center. This is the fourth annual South Shore visit of the Boston Pops and conductor Keith Lockhart.

"There is nothing quite like hearing the Boston Pops at the Music Circus," says Sarah Hannan, executive director of the South Shore Art Center. "You literally feel as if you are in the orchestra, as no seat is more than 50-feet from the stage. Veteran Boston Pops audience-members rave about the intimacy of the Music Circus. Add to that the wonderful personality of Keith Lockhart, a Broadway superstar, and a program of blockbuster music and it's most definitely an evening to remember."

Concert tickets are $90.75 or $76.75 and are available at the South Shore Music Circus Box Office at 130 Sohier St., off Route 3A in Cohasset or through Ticketmaster at Ticketmaster.com. A limited number of premium concert packages are available through the South Shore Art Center, 781-383-2787 and include preferred seating and a post-concert reception with Keith Lockhart. The gala celebration is sponsored by Rockland Trust.

Keith Lockhart will lead the Boston Pops in a musical tribute to Broadway and Hollywood, Saturday July 28, at the South Shore Music Circus.

Broadway sensation Marin Mazzie will perform with the Boston Pops and Keith Lockhart, Saturday July 28, at the South Shore Music Circus.

Smashed window

Police are investigating a report of a smashed rear window to a resident's 2005 Lexus on Atlantic Avenue. The call came in at about 5:30 p.m. last Thursday (June 28). The caller said she had used the car earlier that day and the window was not broken at that time. The officer looked inside the car and could not find a rock or other instrument that would have caused the damage. Police also spoke with neighbors to see if they had heard or seen anything. Chief Hussey said there is no further evidence at this time but the matter is still under investigation.

Fence broken

An 81-year-old driver accidentally hit the gas pedal instead of the brake while pulling into an angled parking space on Elm Street at the harbor. Police said he drove up onto the curb and into the fence on Tuesday (June 26) at about 2:50 p.m. He was not cited but will be responsible for repairs to the damaged property, Chief Hussey said.

Car 'eggings'

Police are investigating two new reports of cars being egged in town and will determine if these incidents are connected to other recent incidents. Chief Hussey said police have identified suspects in the recent, prior "eggings" that took place a couple of weeks ago. "We are looking to bring some closure to this," he said.

TODAY'S MORTGAGE MARKET

by Jim Sweeney

Are 1% Mortgage Advertisements for Real?

The answer is yes and no. Yes, you can make payments as if your interest rate was 1% and No, your interest rate is not 1%. This is an Adjustable Rate Mortgage usually referred to as an Option ARM that gives you four payment amounts (minimum, interest only, 15 yr, or 30 yr) to choose from each month. Your minimum payment rate will increase annually in an amount approximately equal to a 1% increase in the rate. The payment change is yearly but the interest rate can change monthly. If you choose the minimum payment based on a rate of 1% the difference between 1% and your actual interest rate (deferred interest) is added to your mortgage balance. The end result is much higher payments after several years and/or a higher payoff amount if the property is sold. The advantage of this type of loan is short-term payment management. A loan of $500,000 could have minimum payments in years 1 through 6 of: (1) $1,608 (2) $1,728 (3) $1,858 (4) $1,997 (5) $2,147 (6) $4,504.

This payment schedule can be very useful to homeowners dealing with short-term financial plans that are expected to resolve themselves in a few years, but it's not for everyone. When considering this type of loan or any Adjustable Rate Mortgage you need to calculate what happens in future years and if the changes fit your plans. If you would like a brochure on this type of loan (Option ARM) or Adjustable Rate Mortgages or simply have questions about them, please call me.

PROPS TO 'MISS SAIGON'

Company Theatre production features authentic helicopter

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

There will be a cast of 41 local performers in the upcoming Company Theatre production of "Miss Saigon," but the biggest star in the show won't have a speaking role — unless you count the sound effect of a helicopter blade as dialogue — and will be coming all the way from Connecticut to appear in Norwell. In keeping with the original Broadway production of the musical, an authentic Vietnam War-era "Huey" helicopter will be used in the famous scene depicting the evacuation of the last Americans from Saigon.

"I hate to see a show rely on a prop, but this one so captures the emotion of a very big day in American and Vietnamese history," explained Company Co-Artistic Director Zoe Bradford by telephone last week from her home in Hingham. "In order to capture the excitement of that moment, you have to see it. You have to have a real 'Huey' on stage. I researched getting other helicopter parts or imitations, but I always knew I wanted a real 'Huey.'After quite a bit of research, and getting nowhere, one was finally found in Connecticut at the Rocky Hill Town Theatre. It had been used in their production of 'Miss Saigon.' It wasn't easy getting it here, but a good friend finally brought it up to us on a flatbed truck. We'll have to cut it down some to fit on our stage, but fortunately our former technical director Bob Grazioso has come out of retirement to help us. He has been invaluable on this project."

What Bradford didn't realize at first was that the helicopter was more than just an out-of-service chopper, it was also a piece of history.

"When we finally got the 'Huey' up here we learned that it had been in service in Vietnam and came complete with M-16 bullet holes. It is so much more than just a prop, it is a real Vietnam war relic. It has its own aura of tragedy all over it. It is profound to work with a piece like this," says Bradford of the helicopter which was first purchased by the Connecticut Theatre from a Pennsylvania military storage facility. "We all have great respect for history. We hold things like this in great reverence."

While "Miss Saigon" has always garnered attention for the helicopter and other elaborate props, the show has also earned acclaim for its score by Claude-Michel Schonberg and Alain Boubil and lyrics by Boubil and Richard Maltby Jr. It premiered at London's Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, on September 20, 1989, running for 10 years. It opened at New York's Broadway Theatre on April 11, 1991, and closed on January 28, 2001, after 4,092 performances. It was the second major triumph for Schonberg and Boubil, the creative team behind "Les Miserables."

A contemporary retelling of the opera "Madame Butterfly" by Giacomo Puccini, "Miss Saigon" — set in 1970's Saigon during the Vietnam War —tells the tale of a doomed romance between a Vietnamese bar girl and an American GI.

"My Co-Artistic Directors Jordie Saucerman, Michael Joseph and I have been drawn to the piece for a long time," says Bradford, who is co-directing with Saucerman while Joseph serves as music director. "I love this show. It is a great love story and one of sacrifice and passion. I've wanted to do this show since I first saw it on Broadway. For our production, we have assembled a terrific cast, many of whom are new to the Company Theatre."

There will be some familiar faces, too, with Weymouth's John King in the lead role of the Engineer, a French-Vietnamese nightclub owner who forces his dance hall girls into prostitution. For King, who has starred in many Company productions, this lead role is less traditional leading man than those he usually plays.

"I had my eye on the engineer, because I knew it would be a fun role and not just the typical male ingénue. There is depth to the engineer. He has a very three-dimensional quality. The audience sees him as seedy, but they still root for him," explained King by telephone last week. "The Engineer can be scum, but somehow there is still a likeable side to him. He does what he does to survive and to try and realize his dream of coming to America. He acts like a jerk most of the time, but when he is faced with any kind of real power he backs down because he is really a coward."

He's also a new kind of character for King, seen in Boston last season in "1776" at the Lyric Stage and "The Bubbly Black Girl Sheds her Chameleon Skin" at Speakeasy.

"I played Chinese for a split second in Company's production of 'Gloryland' a few years back, but the engineer is really my first Asian character. He's also my first pimp. Where else but on stage could I get to work so closely with so many beautiful girls and not get in trouble?"

For King, who has sung everything from Sondheim and Kander & Ebb to Rodgers and Hammerstein and Elton John, the music of "Miss Saigon" had great appeal, too.

"I really like this score a great deal and we have some beautiful voices in our cast, too, which makes it all the better," says King, who will perform the show-stopping "The American Dream" atop a vintage 1955 dark blue Buick convertible acquired along with the helicopter.

Bradford, Saucerman, Joseph, and choreographer Sally Ashton Forrest have held not only rehearsals with King and his fellow cast members, but also discussions of the musical's more serious moments. In addition to choreographing and staging the show, Ashton Forrest is bringing her knowledge and expertise of Asian culture to the project, having been associated with the Martial Arts Center in Braintree since 1997 and now serving as an instructor and third degree black belt holder there. Her awareness of Asian traditions, culture, and martial arts has been particularly helpful when stage combat needed to be applied, according to Bradford.

"When we're performing, we will be thinking of all the people who fought and died in Vietnam. We also know we will very likely have some veterans of the war in our audience and we will be very respectful of them. This show is a very splashy, entertaining musical, but it also conveys a deeper message, too, in the way it deals with a tumultuous part of history," says Bradford. "We're not just doing musical theater. We're here to honor those who fought in Vietnam and the children left behind after the War. As we have told our cast, 'You can sing lyrics well, but if you don't understand them we won't have a masterpiece, just a really good show.' We all want 'Miss Saigon' to be a masterpiece."

"Miss Saigon" will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, from July 27 to Aug. 19. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at companytheatre.com

Movie review

Prescription for anger

SiCKO (A-)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

America: Land of the Free, Home of the Brave and the Place Where You May Go Broke if You Get Sick.

P.S.: France takes far better care of its citizens, and even the prisoners at Gitmo get better health care than we do.

More "Bowling for Columbine" than "Fahrenheit 9/11," "SiCKO" adopts a muted version of muckraker Michael Moore's usually scathing tone to shed light on a shameful truth of American society. Namely, that we have allowed the profit motive to keep us from taking care of our sick in a civilized manner.

Opening with George W. Bush idiotically lamenting that OB-GYNs can't "spread their love" (for fear of lawsuits, presumably), we see an American citizen self-suturing a horrific gash because he is one of millions without health insurance, and cannot afford to pay for care.

Here's what we've come to: Some elderly have to choose between food and medication. A young single mother sneaks across the border from Detroit into Canada and pretends to be a Canadian citizen in order to get free health care and medicine for her kids.

But "SiCKO" isn't about Americans who don't have health insurance. It's about those who do, including a man who slices the tops off of two fingers and is given a choice.

Michael Moore visits Paris to research part of his expose on America's health-care system.

Fix one finger for $60,000 or the other for $12,000. Bingo, he chooses the $12,000 solution and will live the rest of his life without a piece of himself. This is not a choice this man would have had to make in any other major Western nation.

How come we don't have universal health care? We wuz robbed, and it looks like Tricky Dicky Nixon, who started this HMO thing with a fat cat contributor, was a crook after all.

Meet retirement-ready Donna and her husband. They've worked all their lives, but have had to sell their home and move into their daughter's storage room because of health-care co-pays.

Say hello to Doug, who was told his infant daughter she could have only one cochlear implant.

As Moore, who combines the DNA of Upton Sinclair and Woody Allen, demonstrates, Congress and the president are on the health-care-pharma-company payrolls. The film's big showcase involves rescue workers from Ground Zero, who are being bled dry by the health-care costs they have incurred due to respiratory and other ailments.

Moore engineers a reversal, chartering a boat and taking people to Cuba, where citizens have universal health care (a trip for which Moore is being investigated by the feds).

Lo and behold, an inhaler that costs $125 here, costs 5 cents there. The patient plans to fill a suitcase.

Like "An Inconvenient Truth," "SiCKO" is a civics-minded, revelatory teaching tool. The aim, of course, is to make learning fun, but if the lessons of "SiCKO" are too sickening to be fun or funny, they're still worth learning.

Rated PG-13. "SiCKO" contains foul language and a scene of gross imagery.

Black Sea Salsa Band

Evenings Under the Stars

The South Shore Conservatory announces its 2007 season of Evenings Under the Stars at the Jane Carr Amphitheater, One Conservatory Drive, Hingham, and the Performing Arts Center, Alden Street, Duxbury.

Black Sea Salsa Band kicks off the season at the Carr Amphitheater on July 7, featuring Latin-inspired music including samba, cha cha, mambo, guaracha, calypso, jive, bomba, funk and line dance. The 14-piece band of percussion, guitar, brass, woodwind, piano and four vocalists will be joined on stage by professional salsa dancers. Dancing is encouraged for audience members who can't sit still.

Beth MacLeod as Carmen

Carmen, Georges Bizet's most popular and colorful opera, will be presented on July 13, in Duxbury and July 14, in Hingham, with Beth MacLeod of Duxbury in the title role. The cast includes singers from Opera by the Bay, guest artists and a chorus of South Shore singers. Katherine Kilburn of the Greater New Haven Chamber Orchestra conducts.

The Evenings Under the Stars Festival Orchestra, with Nicholas Palmer conducting, brings the series to a close on a high note, and for the first time the Orchestra will present the concert in Duxbury, on July 20, in addition to the traditional finale in Hingham, on July 21. The concert features Glinka's Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture, followed by Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, featuring Anita Chen, winner of the Solo Competition in last summer's Duxbury Music Festival. The program concludes with Dvorak's Symphony No. 8 in G Major.

The audience is encouraged to come early for concert previews at 6 pm.

The July 7 preview features a demo and mini dance lesson by Extreme Dance Sport, and the previews of Carmen and the EUS Festival Orchestra feature Katherine Kilburn and Nicholas Palmer respectively, presenting introductions to the evenings' performances. Opening Acts at 6:30 feature performances by South Shore Conservatory faculty and students. Concert time is 7 pm.

Sunday mornings are especially for kids with nationally-acclaimed Grammy winner Bill Harley presenting his unique and hilarious blend of songs and stories on July 8. On July 15, Conservatory musicians invite all kids on stage as they build a band, one instrument at a time, with the help of their young assistants. Children (and adults) will have a blast as they learn about instruments, participate in music-making and join in the grand finale. Sunday morning performances are at 10 a.m. in the Carr Amphitheater in Hingham.

'Girl Authority' takes charge

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

By the time headliner Jesse McCartney takes the stage at the South Shore Music Circus on Friday night, his young, mostly female fans should be worked up to a feverish frenzy thanks to not one, but two opening acts. Joseph, Kevin and Nicholas Jonas — known to the tween legions as "Jonas Brothers" — will rock out with music from their 2006 debut album, "It's About Time," and perhaps a few songs from their eponymous second CD set for release in August from Hollywood Records. And, just to balance the boy band power of the Jonas Brothers and "Dream Street" alum McCartney, "Girl Authority" will shake up the Tent with their youth-infused covers of songs like "Car Wash," "Holiday," and "Dancin' in the Street."

A group of nine girls (ages 10-15) from Sudbury who met on the community theater circuit, "Girl Authority" has become so popular that their label, Rounder Records, just last month announced plans to partner with PorchLight Entertainment for a licensing and branding deal to co-develop a television series, specials, and direct-to-video programming for the young singers. While the girls prefer keep their full identities private, they do not shy away from the spotlight.

"The music is based on what each of our voices brings to the group," explained Kate, "The Party Girl," recently by telephone from her home on the North Shore. "My song is 'Holiday,' because, like all our songs, it is fun and energetic."

It is also well suited to the role the sixth-grader plays in the group.

"I am 'The Party Girl' and she is me. I'm very social. I host a lot of parties at my house and I love to dance. I can't live without being around people."

Should the time come when the music stops and the party's over, Kate says she will be ready.

"I was a model before, so if this doesn't work out, I'll go back to print and commercials, but if I can't sing anymore for some reason, then I'll be a teacher."

Girl Authority will join Jesse McCartney and the Jonas Brothers at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on July 6 at 8 p.m. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org.

Perfect day ends in tragedy

Triathlon marred by participant's death

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sunday started out perfectly — calm winds, low seas, ocean water in the mid-60s and hundreds of athletes, including more than100 Cohasset residents, gearing up for the 15-mile course that lay ahead of them.

"I couldn't have asked for a better day," said Cohasset Tri Race Director Bill Burnett in an interview Tuesday.

Then, shortly after 8a.m., emergencies in the first leg of the event, called to action volunteer lifeguards, the harbormaster boats and paramedics on duty. Four triathletes were pulled from the water off Cohasset's Sandy Beach in a 45-minute time span.

One of those athletes, a 38-year-old Newton man, died at South Shore Hospital on Sunday. A 40-year-old woman experienced a "cardiac event" and remains in the hospital. Although race officials and police will not release the names of the victims at the request of the families, published reports indicate the male victim was Joseph J. Lyons Jr., of Newton.

The water start was staggered in six waves, or heats, each with less than 150 participants. Lyons was among the first group to hit the waves.

An eyewitness on the shore, Mary Cirafice of Cohasset, watched the race on the right side of the beach where the triathletes entered the water. As the majority of the first heat rounded the first buoy marker, a man began having trouble. She observed other partici-

Unlocking history

Restored Capt. John Wilson House open to public

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Amid the bustling Cohasset village is a chance to journey into the 19th century — a step back to when the fishing industry prospered and nine children lived in a two-bedroom house. The Historical Society's Captain John Wilson House has re-opened to the public after four long years of restoration work.

"There's a lot of mystery we're trying to solve with the house."
— Laura Abrams, assistant curator

The house is steeped in history and was, unfortunately, steeped onto a rock ledge face when it was built in 1810. Shipwrights David Nichols sold the house to Captain Wilson for a mere $475. The precarious location, just inches from the ledge, created a drainage problem around the house and perpetual water damage. With new piping to draw the water away from the house and a complete restoration, right down to the original paint colors, has revealed a historically accurate structure that is as good as it ever was.

With completely re-vamped exhibits, the Wilson House is ready to welcome history buffs and curious minds alike. The prime piece of real estate at the juncture of South Main Street and Elm Street has been interpreted to represent a storied history of the Wilson family, Cohasset and the typical nineteenth century family.

"The more we find out about Captain Wilson, the more questions we have," says Laura Abrams, the Historical Society's assistant curator. Finding out about Captain Wilson, the man and his family, has proved to be a continually intriguing process for Society.

"We feel there is more information and more [artifacts] out there, it's an ongoing research project," says Abrams. Why did Wilson live in such a modest home, cramped with nine children, when the fishing industry was booming? Why did an Army Corps of Engineers captain write to Wilson about his concerns of the original Minot Lighthouse? Did he take any action? Curious still is there is little known about Captain Wilson's wife who was left for likely months at a time while Wilson embarked on long fishing expeditions. These are just some of the mysteries left for Abrams and the Society to uncover.

In their search, they regularly check

The room's artifacts are arranged in such a way so that the viewer feels like someone just left the room.

Possible budget shortfall

Early projections could mean $400K override

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Preliminary projections for Fiscal 2009 show a shortfall of $410,000, which could mean an override vote at the spring 2008 Town Meeting.

At the request of the Board of Selectmen, Town Manager Bill Griffin and Director of Finance Mike Buckley worked up a forecast for revenue and expenditure in next year.

"We did not make broad assumptions," said Griffin, who indicated in fiscal 2008 the town saw greater increases in state allocations and local receipts than was expected.

"These are very preliminary projects and are subject to change (both good and bad) as time goes by," Griffin said in an e-mail this week, "that is especially the case with state aid, over the past six years we have seen state aid cut, state aid level funded, state aid increased and state aid increased more than we thought would occur."

The conservative revenue numbers included a 5 percent increase in Chapter 70 funds as opposed to and 8.8 percent increase in fiscal 2008. Local receipts jumped 5.62 percent in fiscal 2008, but the town has projected a 1.23 percent increase for fiscal 2009. Tax levy will have $500,000 in new growth revenue. No Proposition 2 1/2 is assumed.

Department heads worked up their projected budgets for fiscal 2009. From preliminary operating budgets, the general government operating budget has a projected increase of 3.5 percent. The school budget is projected to increase 6 percent in the upcoming fiscal year.

With fiscal 2007 books just ending June 30) and fiscal 2008 barely begun, Griffin reminded the Selectmen the numbers are only rough estimates.

"We have assumed a certain level of expenditure based on past trends. We continually examine ways to save money and tighten the belt, especially since especially since we have brought

Pest Management

All three school buildings in town now have indoor and outdoor plans to deal with mosquitoes and other potentially harmful insects. In accordance with the Children and Families Protection Act schools seeking pesticide applications from the state as a preventative measure are required to file an integrated pest management program with the state. The objective is to limit children's exposure to pesticides and to keep the athletic fields and playgrounds safe. Facility Manager Brian Adams created a separate plan for each school. Residents and parents can view the plan(s) by visiting http://massnrc.org/ipm/ and clicking "Locate a Plan."

'White cloud' descends on gas station

36 treated, 1 transported to hospital

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sunday was a non-stop morning for the Fire Department. After assisting the Triathlon, units were called to respond to a chemical spill at Leo's Exxon. Potassium bicarbonate, a white powder often used for fire protection, was disperses under the gas station's canopy in under two seconds.

Self-serve gas stations must be equipped with a fire protections system to keep "amateur" gas pumpers safe, said Fire Chief Robert Silvia. Twelve dry powder systems are positioned in the canopy above the gas stations. The fire protection system went off without "apparent reason" and fire officials are still investigating. A mechanical malfunction likely is the cause, said Silvia.

Shortly before 11:30a.m., the dispatcher received several 911 calls from the Leo's Exxon located at the corner of Beechwood Street and Route 3A. What was described as a "white cloud descending" upon the area caused immediate confusion. People tried to get out of the white cloud by seeking cover inside the convenience store, which brought some of the substance into the store. The entire area, the people at the gas station, the cars and some food inside the convenience store and Dunkin Donuts were covered with the potassium bicarbonate.

"It was nothing hazardous, just a respiratory irritant," said Silvia. Potassium bicarbonate is in essence baking soda, it is a non-toxic and often used as a food additive. In the fire protection industry it is called "purple K."

The Fire Department took all necessary precautions. A total of 36 people were treated with first aid on the scene. One older female with a history of respiratory problems was taken to South Shore Hospital on a precaution, said Silvia.

The Board of Health, Dr. Joseph Godzik, Chairman Peggy Chapman and Health Inspector Tara Tradd, arrived on the scene before noontime.

"Any loose food that was not completely sealed and any open drinking cups were thrown out," said Tradd. Sealed packages were wiped down. The gas station, convenience store and Dunkin Donuts were closed until the following morning. Tradd inspected the store before they opened at 5a.m.

The people were instructed to go home and shower immediately, said Chapman. About 10 cars were affected by the potassium bicarbonate, she said. Cars under the canopy were more severely impacted because they had their window and doors open. The very fine white substance was both inside and outside their vehicles, she said.

A hazmat team was notified but did not need to respond. The Department of Environmental Protection was contacted. The concern was with the runoff of the water during clean-up because if a large concentration reached a stream or other body of water the pH would be altered and could kill fish, said Silvia. A copious amount of water was used to dilute the water.

An environmental clean-up company, Cyn Environmental, was hired by the gas station owner for the clean-up effort and used industrial vacuums and other methods to prevent the runoff from getting into the storm drains. The clean-up contractor had direct communication with the DEP. The two on-site catch basins are dry wells and do not lead to any streams or rivers, said Silvia.

14-, 15-year olds identified in burglaries

Scituate Police will be seeking similar charges against the youths for a number of overnight burglaries occurring in their town.

On July 11, Cohasset and Scituate Police detectives, working jointly on an investigation into a series of overnight burglaries in Cohasset and Scituate, conducted interviews in furtherance of the investigation. Information developed as a result of these interviews led to the identification of two Cohasset juvenile males, 14 and 15 years of age, for whom Cohasset Police will seek criminal charges for the June 20th burglary of a Beechwood Street residence during the early morning hours. The investigation also led to the recovery of property stolen from the Beechwood Street residence. Scituate Police will be seeking similar charges against the youths for a number of overnight burglaries occurring in their town.

The investigation also led to both youths being implicated in the arson of a portable toilet located at the Beechwood Street ball field during the month of June. Cohasset Police will seek additional charges against both youths in connection with this incident.

Both incidents remain under investigation and charges against other subjects may be forthcoming.

Police Beat

Chief: fireworks are illegal in Massachusetts

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

This week's police log is full of complaints about fireworks called in by a number of residents. Police Chief James Hussey said it is illegal to purchase or possess fireworks in Massachusetts. That is not the case in New Hampshire and some southern states, he said. "We know people bring them into our state, especially around the Fourth of July," he said. "Our biggest concern is people's safety. We do not think setting off fireworks is a safe activity for families to be involved in."

Hussey said in most cases when police respond to a fireworks complaint, the officers confiscate the fireworks. However, if police have dealt with the individuals before, they could seek a criminal complaint.

He said police will usually give the people a warning the first time. "However, we are very concerned with kids around that someone could get hurt."

Hussey urged residents to continue to call the police if they hear fireworks going off. "It is our intent, at a minimum, to confiscate the fireworks and we could seek a criminal complaint," he said.

Suspicious vehicle

Police were not able to locate a "suspicious vehicle" reported by a caller last week (July 3) at 4 a.m. The Boston Globe delivery service reported that someone was following the "female delivery person." Police also checked on the welfare of a second female delivery person and were not able to find the car for which there was not a good description, Chief Hussey said.

Hussey speculated that it is possible someone in a car saw the delivery persons going in and out of driveways and thought someone was prowling around the area.

Vandalism

A 20-year-old and a 19-year-old who work at a local restaurant had a verbal argument last week (July 3) that resulted in the 20-year-old damaging the passenger-side mirror on the teen's car, police said. Chief Hussey said the one who did the damage admitted to it and he and the 19-year-old have made an agreement for him to pay for the damage.

In an unrelated incident, police received a radio call about a vehicle vandalized on Lighthouse Lane, which is on Government Island. The damage was to the side mirrors on the vehicle. When the call came in an officer recalled seeing several kids in the area earlier "messing around near the boats at the Sailing Club," Chief Hussey said. He remembered who they were, located them and one of the teens made an admission about breaking the mirrors. The victim is getting a damage estimate and the teen responsible for the vandalism will pay for it. A deadline was arranged and if not met, the teen will be summonsed to court, Hussey said.

Pitched tent

Family members from Montana that had been driving across country pulled over on Route 3A last week (3:18 p.m. on July 4) in Hingham near the Cohasset line and pitched a tent where they planned to spend the night, police said. Cohasset notified Hingham police and the family was directed to Wompatuck State Park.

Hit & Run

A person who works at Shaw's Plaza reported that his car, a 1997 Honda Civic, which was parked there, was damaged sometime between noon and 6 p.m. on July 4. Investigation revealed a small dent on the driver's side fender. There was no debris at the scene, police said.

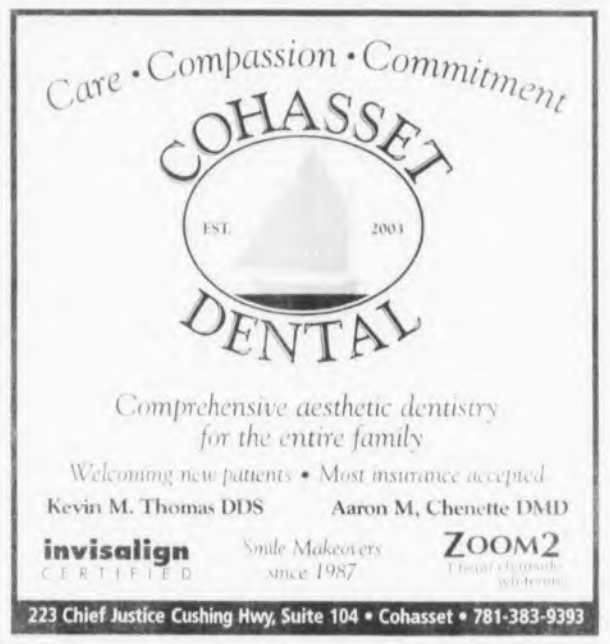
Doorbells rung

Several youths who were running through the Fair Oaks Lane neighborhood ringing doorbells and then taking off, were brought to the station where their parents picked them up, police said. As many as 10-15 kids may have been involved in all and three to four were found and brought to the station. Police talked to the parents to ensure that a message was sent about stopping this behavior, Chief Hussey said. He said at least one resident, an elderly woman, was upset.

K-9 unit

A Scituate K-9 unit found two 14-year-old Cohasset boys sought for breaking and entering of a vehicle on Summer Street in Scituate. The boys were located in the Church Street area of Cohasset and were taken into custody by Scituate police. The incident occurred July 7 at about 4:30 a.m.

Drifting kayak



A drifting kayak off Jerusalem Road with a paddle, fishing rod and boat ladder inside caused concern last week (about 3 p.m., July 7) because public safety officials thought the owner may have fallen overboard. The Coast Guard was notified, as were the fire and police chiefs. However, the owner was soon located and told to pick up his kayak at the Harbormaster's station.

TODAY'S MORTGAGE MARKET

by Jim Sweeney

Reasons for Buying Now!!!

I start working with many of my clients before they contact a realtor and begin looking at homes on the market. When they do start shopping, they have an understanding of all the steps between shopping and closing, the maximum mortgage amount they can obtain using different mortgage programs, the monthly payments, and the closing costs they can expect. They also have my advice to "Buy Now" as a response to thinking that "I missed out on a good time to buy a few years ago" and "I want to wait until the values are going up." A few years ago, home prices were at an all-time high and rising, homes for sale were purchased quickly, leaving you with fewer choices and the risk of being outbid on the homes you did like. The need to act fast in the market often meant you paid too much for a home that wasn't quite what you wanted and the nervous feeling you paid too much. These "good times" weren't good for everyone. Although the early buyers are now in homes worth much more than they paid, later buyers saw prices continue to increase and then retreat to their purchase price, and the very late buyers wish they could "Buy Now" as you can. I do read the various predictions that some areas might see slightly lower prices in 2007. I also read opinions that prices may start up in late 2007, and some that say the market will not change until 2008 or 2009. In any case, "Waiting for prices to go up" doesn't make much sense. In the worst case, waiting means the price of the $400,000 house you could purchase today goes up 5% to $420,000 and then you buy. Waiting may make no difference, if the price goes down 5% and you wait until prices start going up and pay $400,000 next year. Every prediction I do read is an opinion of when and not if prices will go up. In the long run, everyone seems to agree that the value of real estate will continue to increase as it always has.

Making the decision to "Buy Now" means you can take advantage of the excellent selection of property for sale and find a home you like in your preferred location. The advantages of home ownership have remained intact. Home Ownership and its accompanying tax advantages still represent a long-term investment in your future. The privacy, stability, ability to customize a larger living area to your liking, and feeling the pride of ownership has not changed. If you are ready to "Buy Now", consider the disadvantages of waiting. If you are not sure you are ready, I will be glad to evaluate your situation or advise you on the steps to prepare yourself.

Hardware store decision delayed

Special meeting set for July 17

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"I'm sorry to have them wait, but we have agreed to expedite the decision."
— Woody Chittick, ZBA chairman

The Zoning Board of Appeals decision on the Cohasset Hardware building proposed renovation will have to wait a few more days. An apparent mix-up within the board on who was supposed to write the draft decision scheduled to be deliberated on Tuesday evening led to the delay.

The public hearing on the Hardware store was closed at last month's meeting of the ZBA (June 6). Jim and Tina Watson, owners of the building, are seeking to turn the iconic village building into two retail spaces on the first floor and four one-bedroom apartments split between the second and third floors. In order to execute their plans, the ZBA will need to grant both a special permit to allow multi-family dwellings on the second and third floor as well as a variance to get around the 40,000 square foot lot restriction.

When the hearing closed, the applicants were told to expect a decision on the application at the next ZBA meeting July 10. Two members of the board were assigned to work on the draft decision: Barbara Power and Charles Higginson. It seems neither one realized he/she was supposed to write it.

Chairman Woody Chittick called the situation "a fluke" when reached for comment on Wednesday. "It's very unusual for people to have expected a decision and not get it," he said. He could not recall a recent example in the last few years.

"This really is unacceptable," said Tina Watson, after waiting over two hours to hear the decision. Although the deliberation for the hardware store was scheduled for 9:30p.m., the discussion did not begin until close to 11p.m. Members of the ZBA confirmed they did not need any more information from the applicant when asked by a frustrated Jim Watson.

Chittick said he was not aware a decision would not be forthcoming until the ZBA discussion late in the evening; otherwise he would have let the applicants know earlier.

"I'm sorry to have them wait, but we have agreed to expedite the decision," said Chittick, "in the giant scheme of things they probably lost a week."

The ZBA will hold a special meeting on Tuesday, July 17 at 8p.m. to deliberate and vote on a decision.

pants swimming along with the man to bring him to the closest rescue board. Shortly after, he was transferred to the boat. The swimmer was discolored and being worked on, she said.

From Cirafice's vantage point, it looked like the emergency medical supplies, like a defibrillator, were all on shore, not on the boat. Officials could not confirm if the boats were equipped with medical supplies. The Harbormaster Department has declined to comment on any of the triathlon events. The man was brought to shore by the harbormaster boat and eventually carried to the Advanced Life Support ambulance.

Cohasset Fire Chief Robert Silvia said a paramedic team under the leadership of emergency doctor Michael Hughes treated and stabilized the man before heading to South Shore Hospital.

"Anything that could be done was being done in the back of the ambulance," said Silvia, the ambulances are equipped like a mini-emergency room.

"Unfortunately, the male was not resuscitated and was pronounced dead," stated a press release from the Cohasset Triathlon on Monday. Officials do not yet know the cause of death.

"We have to wait and see what the reports say," said Burnett, the race director. An autopsy will be performed on the victim. Until the report is finished, any attribution of death is "speculation," he said.

The water portion of the event was well choreographed with racers leaving the beach in five-minute intervals. Each group had a different colored swimming cap. The water had very few waves and there was only a light wind. There was space to minimize confusion, said a 25 year veteran triathlete and Cohasset resident Greg Weissman.

"Typically [in other triathlons] there are three-minute spaces between waves," said Weissman, "There was more than enough time between the waves."

Hingham resident Adrienne Fowkes, like many of Cohasset Triathlon's 720 registered participants, was a first time triathlon participant. An avid runner, Fowkes said she knew the swimming portion was not going to be her strongest leg.

"I never once felt unsafe in the water," she said there were kayaks, the harbormaster and other safety boats, "I felt people were watching us."

Fowkes witnessed the safety precautions at work when she slowed down to allow a struggling woman to be pulled onto a kayak. Triathletes surrounding the woman in trouble flagged down help, she said.

"I can't say enough how well organized the course was, it could have been mass pandemonium and it wasn't. Not only the race volunteers and other officials, there were so many people out on the course cheering us on," said Fowkes. "It felt like the whole town was out to support the athletes."

Fowkes was not alone in praising the organization of the triathlon; the Cohasset Mariner received dozens of e-mails from both experienced and first time triathloners commending the Cohasset Tri. Many expressed their sadness and shock at the man's death, but hoped it would not prevent the event from returning next year.

"Personally, I'm going to sit back and look at what we can do better. When I started organizing this triathlon, I had every intention of making it an annual event," said Burnett, listing the positive aspects of the race as created a community spirit throughout town, getting families together for the day, having family members train together, "it got people to do something they wouldn't have thought of doing otherwise. It was a good day for Cohasset."

However, the tragedy has made the triathlon's success bittersweet for him.

"I feel no joy today, just a lot of sadness," he said, "my heart goes out to the victim's family."

An investigation and thorough review of the organization, planning and strategies used at Sunday's triathlon is underway, said Cohasset Town Manager Bill Griffin at Monday night's meeting of the Board of Selectmen. The investigation will take time, he said, and the determinations will be reported back to the Selectmen at a later date.

The Cohasset Triathlon was a sanctioned USA Triathlon event. A lengthy document (about 15 pages) with details about the course and safety measures in place must be completed and approved, said Burnett. A sanction from USA Triathlon means the event has met all the guidelines and expectations the organization has set out.

Despite the tragedy in the water, Burnett said he would not do anything differently in the water portion of the event.

"We were well prepared, but I didn't think we would have to go to the level we did," said Burnett.

The Board of Selectmen, which approved the organization of the race back in the fall, will review the report and determine if the race will be allowed to continue.

"Event was extremely successful, I'd love to see a repeat of it next year," said Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil in a phone interview, "the organization was outstanding, the public safety was outstanding. It is unfortunate that somebody had a cardiac arrest while participating, but we were well prepared."

The Sandy Beach Association, which privately owns the beach, gave their permission for the triathlon to use the beach. However, Sandy Beach Association President Robin Lawrence said they did not provide lifeguards for the event, although a few of the lifeguards employed by the SBA volunteered for the swim portion of the event.

More than $45,000 was raised to benefit the Triathlon's charity, the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation.

Many competitors say they are looking forward to next year's event.

"The sadness I have at the tragic death of a participant is a painful reminder that life can be short and unpredictable and I plan to spend it by continuing to challenge myself, hopefully at the second Annual Cohasset Tri," said Cohasset resident Deb Bowen.

the last two budgets to town meeting in a balanced format," Griffin said.

He and other department heads will be looking to increase revenues by making sure our fees are up to date to match the level of expenditure.

"We hope to find ways to address [the $410,000 shortfall]," said Griffin. The projections will be updated as more information becomes available.

"I am always happier to later say we have more money than we thought rather than less. My fingers are always crossed," he said.

Status of various committees to be reviewed

The Board of Selectmen plans to review the status of advisory committees established by the Selectmen in the past. Chairman Gary Vanderweil proposed a motion to review the charges and goals of the committee as well as set a timeline for the completion of those goals.

"We need to have a timeline and goals for these committees," to give them focus and direction, "as opposed to being open ended," said Vanderweil. The Selectmen have asked the committees come before them in September.

The committees include the Cable Advisory Committee, the Housing Partnership Committee, the Economic Development Committee, the Stormwater Management Committee, the Harbor Health Committee, the Long Range Budget Committee and the Technology Committee. Each committee was established by a vote of the Selectmen and the Selectmen appoint the members.

Beach, RTF permits on sale

The "all facility sticker" for the fiscal 2008 is on sale during normal business hours at Town Hall and at the DPW garage on weekends, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., and Monday through Friday, from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Sticker prices are $50 for residents under the age of 60 and $15 for seniors. This sticker will allow access to the Recycling Transfer Facility and Sandy Beach, as well as parking at all areas in town that require a sticker.

Residents are encouraged to purchase stickers through the mail by providing the appropriate fee, a copy of a current registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Coast Guard investigating commuter boat collision

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"The inside was a mess from the bow of the Laura coming through the windows into the ceiling area."
— Tom Maloney, commuter

Those who travel from Hingham to Boston on the commuter boat will be the first to tell you, it is the best way to get to work.

With the resumption of train service on the Greenbush line still several months away, the only alternative is fighting gridlock on Route 3 and the Southeast Expressway.

But Tuesday's 6:50 a.m. commute for those on the Massachusetts, a Hingham commuter boat operated by Mass Bay Lines, was anything but smooth.

On its way from Hingham to Boston in heavy fog, the Massachusetts and another commuter boat, the Laura, which operated by Boston Harbor Cruises, collided in Boston Harbor. The Laura, which was on its way back to Hingham with a crew of four on board, crashed through the windows near the bow of the Massachusetts which had 151passengers. The crash occurred near the Long Island Bridge.

"Glass, metal and ceiling tiles came crashing through the bow of the boat," said commuter Tom Maloney of Hingham, who, an hour later, was still shaking while sitting at his desk in his office in Boston. "Thank God, no one was sitting in that corner."

The Coast Guard, which is investigating the incident, said no one was seriously injured. Both the 88-foot Massachusetts and the Laura suffered water damage above the water line and did not take on any water.

Spokesperson Petty Officer Zach Zubricki said the Coast Guard received a call at 7:30 a.m. from Coast Guard employees that were taking the ferry to their jobs in Boston.

The Massachusetts, which was inbound, made it safely to Rowe's Wharf. The outbound Laura, which was heading back to Hingham, went to a pier in Charlestown.

Several witnesses said a third boat, a smaller recreational-type vessel, that was reported as being in the vicinity of the two ferries was involved. Zubricki said the Coast Guard is investigating those reports as well as whether the fog was a factor. The Coast Guard launched two 25-foot rescue boats as a precaution, he said.

Both crews will be drug and alcohol tested, which is routine in these incidents, Zubricki said.

Maloney, the Hingham commuter, said it was close call for a male passenger, who was seated in the center bow of the Massachusetts, very close to the impact point. The outside of the boat did not appear to be as badly damaged as the inside. "The inside was a mess from the bow of the Laura coming through the windows into the ceiling area," he said.

Charles Clapp, who has taken the commuter boat for about 15 years and was seated in the back of the Massachusetts, said he was surprised that with GPS technology, the collision was not avoided. Tuesday morning the Massachusetts missed the main opening under the Long Island Bridge and was put into reverse and then went through, he said. "The commuter boat route is pretty well warn," Clapp said "It seemed odd with the GPS technology to miss the bridge opening." The Massachusetts stopped, backed up and then went through. Ten minutes later, the boat was put in neutral and then reverse just before contact occurred.

"I heard the crunch and I stood up to take a look," said Clapp, who is 6 ft., 6 ins. tall. He said right away he knew it was the Laura, which is one of the older commuter boats and has a metal bow. He said usually boats pass portside to portside not starboard to starboard. Clapp said he was not sure what happened or if the Massachusetts turned at the last minute.

He said the passengers remained calm and put on their lifejackets. "I finished my coffee and finished reading the paper," Clapp said.

Clapp said he has no plans to stop taking the ferry. "What should I do – get on the Southeast Expressway and feel safer? No!" he said.

Bill Spence, president of Mass Bay Lines Inc., which has operated ferry service since 1963, said the Laura went right through the windows of the Massachusetts. Spence said he was waiting to speak to the captain to get a full report and declined to speculate on the cause of the collision, although he had also heard that a third vessel could have played a role.

Joe Pesaturo, who is the press secretary for the MBTA, which has a contract with Boston Harbor Cruises to provide the ferry service, said one person had minor cuts on his hands but declined medical attention. He estimated the damage to the Laura as being $10,000.

Mass Bay Lines, which is a subcontractor to Boston Harbor Cruises, did not have a damage estimate immediately available.

Pesaturo said the 600-passenger Salacia and 350-passenger James J. Doherty would be inserted into the schedule in place of the Massachusetts and the Laura.

The Massachusetts, which returned to service the beginning of June, as sidelined a year ago after a fire in the engine room. That incident occurred during the afternoon commute back to Hingham. Ironically all the passengers aboard the Massachusetts were transferred to the Laura.

Mark DeGiacomo of Cohasset was on the "next" boat last June during the fire when passengers on the Aurora saw the Massachusetts dead in the water with smoke billowing out and Tuesday morning when his boat pulled onto Rowes Wharf behind the Massachusetts.

"As we walked down the dock it was clear something was going on. Police, fire and Coast Guard personal were everywhere. There were still people on the Massachusetts wearing life jackets," DeGiacomo said.

Martha Bewick of Harbor Consultancy International, a consultant to ferry boat systems said commuter boats are very safe.

"In terms of safety, until the three fatal US ferry accidents in the past several years (Staten Island ferry, Baltimore Harbor water taxi, and a Lake George roll-over), there had been no fatalities in the US ferry industry since World War II," she said. "This is due to the excellent management of the ferry operators throughout the US, the training, and the monitoring of the ferry industry by the Coast Guard.

"You can compare this with annual fatalities on highways, and at railroad grade crossings, and on other transportation modes. Even skateboards and bathtubs!" she said.

Heavy fog may have played a factor in the collision that damaged the Massachusetts, shown here at Rowes Wharf. The Coast Guard is investigating.

Christopher Roy described as 'exemplary student-athlete'

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SUMMERTIME

Hello Cohasset. Is everyone enjoying the summer? From the looks of things around town, it is a great summer for all. Whether at the beach, Town Pool, Harbor or in the yard with the hose, everyone looks so happy. Summer camps and programs look and sound like so much fun and the weather is not too bad. Stay safe, use sunscreen and enjoy every day. Encourage everyone to practice safe train crossing safety as well even before the train gets here. Send in some happy news about some summertime events along with photos or upcoming plans, we all love to hear about them.

I have to pass on some "great work" news to Bill Burnett and all the people who helped with Cohasset's first Triathalon held last Sunday. It was run it what seemed like true organization and motivation and I was so impressed by all.

SCHOLAR-ATHLETE

On Friday, June 1, Christopher Roy graduated from Lawrence Academy during the school's 214th commencement exercises in Groton, Massachusetts. At graduation, Chris was named a co-recipient of The Raymond A. Ilg, Jr. Award for outstanding qualities as an interscholastic athlete.

Earning a place on the academic honor roll for several terms, and on the high honor roll during his senior year, Chris served the school community as a proctor in his dormitory. He was a four-year member of the football and wrestling teams, earning awards in both sports. For his performance on the football team, he earned honorable mention from the Independent School League (ISL) as a junior and, the following season, was named to the All-ISL team and given the Coaches' Award for team spirit. He capped off his wrestling career at Lawrence Academy by winning his weight class's ISL championship match at the Graves-Kelsey tournament, earning the team's title of MVP and All-ISL honors. A three-time MVP, two-time captain, and junior year ISL honorable mention recipient, Chris placed in the league tournament each of his four years and was ultimately ranked fifth at 171 lbs. by the New England Prep School Athletic Council. In his senior year, he was undefeated in league matches and 26-3 overall. Like other athletes at Lawrence Academy who are encouraged to study dance, Chris accepted that challenge by both choreographing and performing a solo piece at a term-ending concert.

During his Winterims, two-week experiential learning sessions in March, Chris assisted in classrooms of underprivileged preschool children at the Lowell Head Start program and challenged himself with a rock- and ice-climbing program. Most recently he explored the topics of propaganda and persuasion in films, joining others in scripting and shooting a short persuasive video documentary as a final project. Chris, whom his advisor calls "an exemplary student-athlete," is the son of Susan Roy-Reposa of Hingham and Peter Roy of Cohasset. He will attend Trinity College in the fall, where he will continue wrestling.

ST. ANDREWS

Seth Cutler, son of the Rev. and Mrs. E. Clifford Cutler, formerly of Cohasset, graduated from the University of St. Andrews during ceremonies conducted on June 19-22. Seth earned an Honors Degree in Geography. He was among 1,362 students who received undergraduate degrees from the university at its campus overlooking the North Sea in east-central Scotland. Beginning in the fall, Seth will begin graduate study in Cities, Culture, and Social Change at King's College London. This was great news for us to hear Seth, congratulations.

U. NEW HAVEN

Congratulations and best wishes go out to William R. Prendergast, a Cohasset resident who graduated from the University of New Haven during spring commencement held on May 26, 2007 with a Bachelor of Science in communication. Super news William, good luck in the future.

HONORS

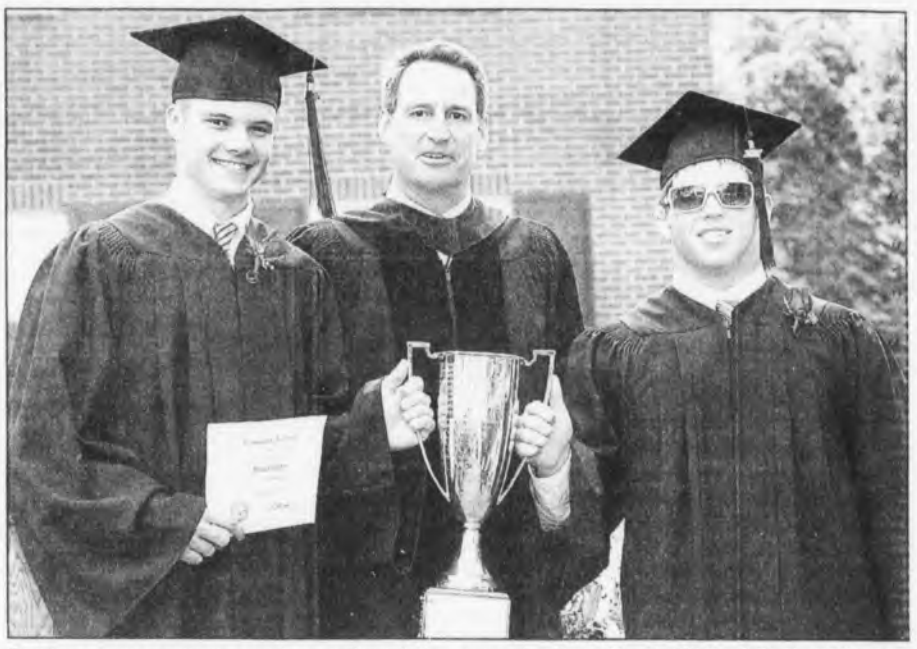
Cameron Cunningham, a Cohasset resident is attending The Master's School in West Simsbury, Conn. Cameron just finished his junior year and received 3rd Quarter High Honors and 4th Quarter Honors. Congratulations, Cameron.

B.U. NEWS

Caroline B. Steele, a resident of Cohasset, has recently been named to the dean's list at Boston University for the Spring semester. Caroline, this is super.

Also, Boston University awarded academic degrees in May to graduates including Stephanie C. Hoskin, Mus.M in music education, and Anne C. Barber, B.S.B in business administration and management. Congratulations to all.

DEAN'S LIST



The University of Hartford is pleased to announce its dean's list for Spring '07 that included Cohasset's Thomas Morgan.

Catherine Calorio, Class of '09, attends Assumption College and was named to the dean's list for the Spring 2007 semester.

Congratulations Tom and Catherine!

TUFTS HONORS

Cohasset's Brendon C. Barrett and Barry C. Tufts earned academic honors at Northeastern University for the spring semester. Both have been named to the dean's list. Brendon is majoring in criminal justice and Barry is a political science major. To attain this honor, students must have a quality point average of 3.25 or greater out of a possible 4.0. Keep up the good work!

During commencement exercises on June 1, Lawrence Academy Head of School D. Scott Wiggins presented co-recipients Chris Roy, son of Peter Roy of Cohasset, (right) and Drew Gallagher of Lowell an award recognizing their outstanding qualities as athletes.

BENTLEY STANDOUTS

Courtney Hurley, a junior, and Brandon Smith, a sophomore, have been named to the dean's list at Bentley College. To achieve dean's list status at Bentley students need an overall average of 3.3 or higher. Congratulations!

MASSASOIT HONORS

Hats off to Cohasset's Daniel J. Roth on attaining dean's list status at Massasoit Community College for the spring semester.

ON STAGE

"Disney's High School Musical" is coming to town through the Cohasset Dramatic Club in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department. The dates are July 20 at 10 am and 7:30 pm, July 21 at 7:30 pm and July 22 at 2 pm. The show is going to be held at Cohasset Middle-High School at 143 Pond St. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased in advance at Buttonwood Books, Front Street Books in Scituate or by calling 617-697-2115. You may also purchase tickets at the door. Grab family and friends and come to one musical and wonderful event that everyone will enjoy! The cast of this show has been working so hard and the end result will be fun, music-filled and a treat for all to enjoy.

HARRY POTTER

Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, celebrates the release of "Harry Potter and The Deathly Hallows" by J.K. Rowling with a party on Fri., July 20 at 10 p.m. Many wonderful and magical events are planned for the evening. A substitute teacher for the Care of Magical Creatures will be available with some of her favorite Hogwarts pets: a Great Horned Owl, a Screech Owl, a Black Rat Snake, a toad and a rat. Other party plans include Harry Potter Trivia and Crossword, the showing of a Harry potter movie, activities, raffles, and arts and crafts. Light refreshments will be served. We invite everyone to come in costume. Buttonwood is offering a 20 percent discount off the cover price of "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows". Books purchased in advance will receive a ticket that will determine book distribution at 12:01 a.m. All children must be accompanied by an adult. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call 1-781-383-2665 or order online at www.buttonwoodbooks.com to order your copy if unable to attend.

That is it for the news this week. Send it all to me no later than 5:00 on Tuesdays.

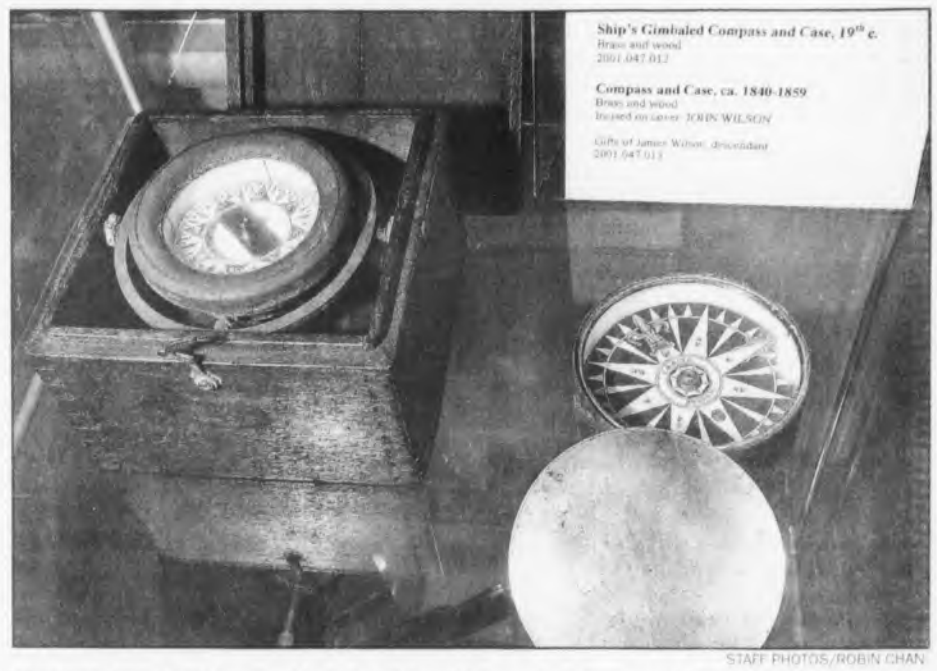
eBay for long lost Wilson items and have contacts in the historic preservation world. By sheer luck they came across a church tax receipt signed by Captain Wilson for sale on eBay. Much of the Wilson family objects were donated to the Historical Society by Captain Wilson's descendents.

A labor of love has brought the Wilson House to its now pristine and historically accurate state. The new displays keep preservation in mind, says Abrams. Acid-free paper is used where appropriate and some objects will be removed from the site during the off-season.

In Captain Wilson's day, the one room first floor served as a ship's chandlery. Now, the first floor is devoted to the life and objects of the Wilson family and how this one family fit in to the larger fabric of 19th-century Cohasset.

Captain Wilson's maritime tools represent a booming fishing trade; Cohasset was one of the largest in Massachusetts during its heyday. A display case houses a British Marine's cutlass that was mistakenly left on Captain Wilson's ship when the British boarded it during the War of 1812. A letter from an Army Corps of Engineers captain, William Swift, concerns the precarious structure of the original Minot Light. A small section is dedicated to the second and third generations of the Wilson family who also lived at 4 Elm Street. Then, a small table shows the many faces of the Wilson house — a teahouse, a photographer's studio, a tailors shop, a candy store and an ice cream parlor.

On the second floor, the house has been interpreted as a typical early 19th-century home. What was once a "catch all" for historic household objects, says Abrams, has been re-designed to incorporate pre-1860 pieces. A children's room, a kitchen, a sitting room and a tiny "master suite" all feature period objects gleaned from the Historical Society's vast collections. Although none of the second floor objects are linked to Captain Wilson and his family, all illustrate a life the life they (and other Cohasset families) lived.



"We tried to comb the collection and find things that were appropriate," says Abrams, who has been involved in building the exhibits for two years, "we tried to get it right."

Unexpected and unique objects are infused throughout the rooms — an antique bread toaster, needlework of the Cohasset Common, a bed warmer and various books and games. A built-in grandfather clock and a piano, both made by another prominent Cohasset village resident, Samuel Bates, anchor the sitting room.

Interestingly left absent from the house is a washroom, "there's a lot of mystery we're trying to solve with the house," says Abrams. The Historical Society hopes with time more pieces of the Captain Wilson's puzzle will come to light, but in the meantime they are happy to usher visitors around the house or let them explore the exhibits in leisure.

The restoration of the Wilson House was funded by Community Preservation funds with the support of Town Meeting. William McGaw donated the structure to the Cohasset Historical Society in 1936. Since becoming stewards the Society has been determined to take every precaution to preserve it and ensure its past is never forgotten.

The Captain John Wilson House is open to the public Tuesday thru Friday 1 to 4:30p.m. and Saturday 10a.m.-2p.m. from June until September. The nearby Maritime Musuem (next door to the Wilson House) is open the same hours. Admission is free, but donations are always welcome. For more information, visit www.cohassethistoricalsociety.org or call 781-383-1434.

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

The first floor of the Historical Society's Wilson House tells the story of Captain Wilson and his family, and their role in greater Cohasset events. Captain Wilson's compass and case is the only item inscribed with John Wilson's name on it. The Wilson House has been completely renovated over the last four years and is now open to the public this summer.

The 19th-century family is working on baking an apple pie in the kitchen of the Wilson home. Women spent the majority of their time in the kitchen cooking for their families. All the artifacts on the second floor are dated pre-1860.

John Wilson's family bible which dates back to approximately 1885 is on display at the Capt. John Wilson house which is now open.

School is in session

CDC presents 'High School Musical' next weekend

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

School is out for the summer, but for the kids involved in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's summer program, they couldn't be more excited about going back. Next weekend, the curtain will go up on "High School Musical," the stage version of the popular Disney Channel original movie.

"It's our biggest summer show to date," says Susan Jaffe, producer of the production and CDC president. The cast is made up of 53 kids from six South Shore towns and range from 8 to 18 years of age. For four years running, the CDC has put on a summer drama program in conjunction with Cohasset Recreation. Last year, when the CDC found out the rights were available for the "High School Musical," they sent in a request right away, "we knew we wanted to do this show," says Jaffe.

The plot, which director Lisa Pratt describes as a "modern day, G-rated 'Grease,'" takes place at East High School. The story follows two high school students, Gabriella Montez and Troy Bolton, as they try to break out of social stereotypes. Brainy Gabriella and basketball star Troy make an unlikely couple when they audition for the school musical — to the shock of their friends. The school's theatrically talented twins, Ryan and Sharpay, attempt to thwart Gabriella and Troy in the pursuit of lead parts.

"The characterizations are very similar to the movie," says Jaffe, with some of the smaller parts having a larger presence on stage.

For the most part, audience will delight in a stage version very much like the famed movie but some elements were altered to make the show "stage ready." Along the way, the cast and crew plan to surprise the audience with a little flair of their own.

The high energy cast of "High School Musical" gets a jump start at rehearsal this week. The CDC's summer production will take to the Cohasset High stage next weekend, July 20-22. From left, Matt McCarty, Logan Pratt, Madison Rockwell, Andrew DiVitre, Betsy Crawford and Ryan Barrow.

A new classmate, Jackie Scott, joins the ranks and serves as the school's PA announcer.

"Inside of the school she's a geek, kinda clumsy, but once she gets in front of the microphone she becomes cool," says Anne Chapman, who recently graduated from Cohasset High, of her character. Without a movie comparison, Chapman got the chance to define her character, "I love the movie, but [the stage version] is definitely better than the movie."

The score and the music arrangements incorporate the larger cast, not just the leads, in most of the songs and there are more lyrics to each of the songs, Chapman says.

Audiences can expect big dance numbers choreographed by Tina Fabrizio, who added a little bit of her own style to the upbeat (and catchy) songs. Parent and CDC volunteer Jen Piepenbrink says, with a smile, her whole family has been singing the songs non-stop for weeks, "you know it's bad when your husband starts singing along."

In addition, audiences will be treated to two new songs not featured in the movie version, "Cellular Fusion" and "Counting on You."

The cast has been working very hard in the weeks leading up to the premiere, pulling double rehearsal sessions most of this past week. Decked out in red and white costumes, the East High Wildcat colors, the cast was practicing their dance moves and song lyrics before rehearsal officially began on Tuesday night.

"They have worked harder than any other cast before," says Jaffe and the cast says it is ready to deliver a top-notch show.

"There's a lot of expectation with the show, so many little kids worship it," says Andrew DiVitre, who plays the lead role of Troy Bolton, who hopes to bring his own personality to the character.

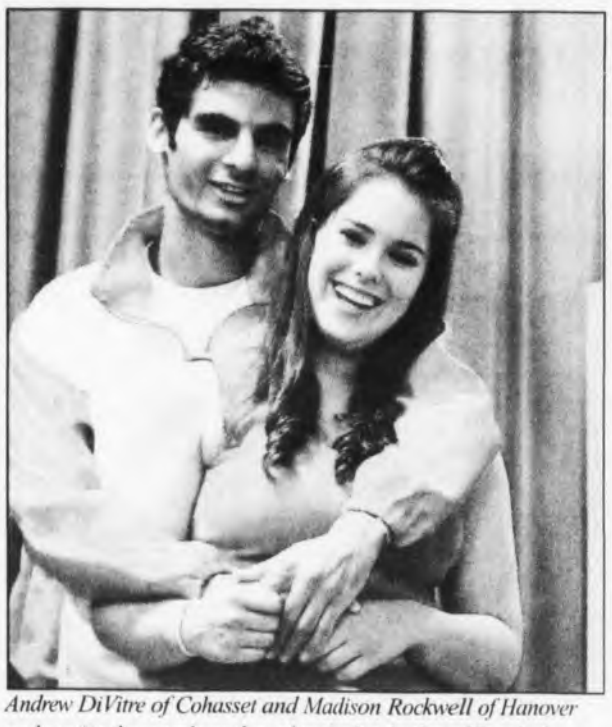
"We want to play our parts but we also want to be ourselves," adds Madison Rockwell of Hanover who plays the female lead of Gabriella. Both Andrew and Madison are playing their first lead roles in a theatre production and they say they couldn't have asked for more perfect parts, "we both know the movie forwards and backwards," says Madison.

The annual summer program brings many repeat participants who share a flair for the dramatic.

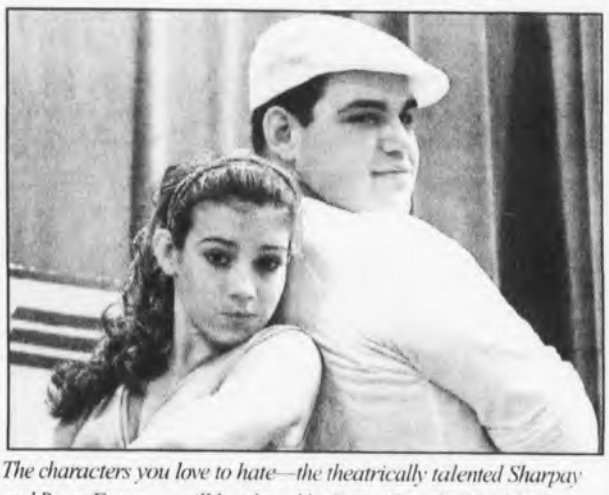


"The kids have a great deal of fun together. The friendships made here extend beyond the show," says Pratt. The kids go on to star in high school productions and some even come back to do CDC productions during the school year.

Although the CDC has called the Town Hall its home for many years, fittingly enough, "High School Musical" will be performed at Cohasset High.

"We know it's going to be a big crowd," says parent and volunteer Piepenbrink, "the air-conditioning is going be great."

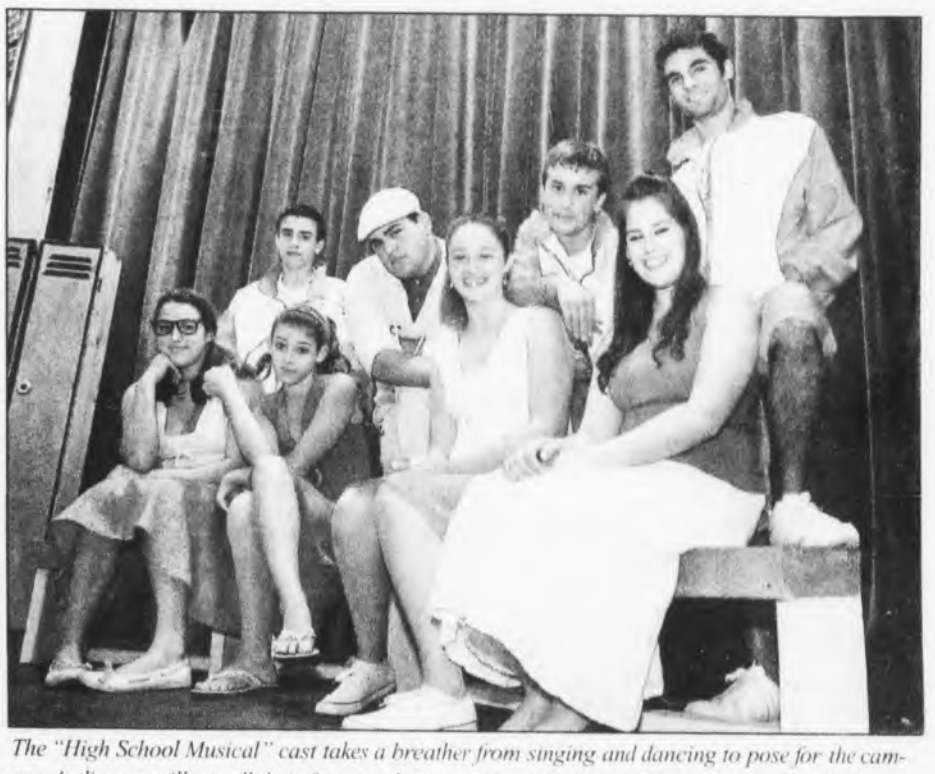
The CDC is already gearing up for it upcoming season and have already selected the plays for next year. In the fall they will present a small cast production of the comedy "Moon over Buffalo." In the spring they plan on bringing out all the stops for "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."



"High School Musical On Stage" will be presented on July 20 at 10a.m. and 7:30p.m., July 21at 7:30p.m. and a Sunday matinee on July 22. Performances will be held at Cohasset High School. Tickets are $10. They can be purchased in advance by calling 617-697-2115, or visiting Buttonwood Books in Cohasset or Front Street Books in Scituate. Tickets will also be available at the door.

Andrew DiVitre of Cohasset and Madison Rockwell of Hanover make quite the couple as they play the lead roles of Troy Bolton and Gabriella Montez. Both are playing their first lead roles in a theatre production and know the movie forwards and backwards.

Thomson Jaffe of Cohasset & Matt McCarty of Marshfield "know a secret" about the upcoming show "High School Musical."



The characters you love to hate—the theatrically talented Sharpay and Ryan Evans — will be played by Betsy Crawford and Ryan Barrow in the CDC's summer production of "High School Musical."

EDITORIAL

Readers Advisory Network

In the newspaper business, editors and reporters are trained to expect the unexpected. We are not producing a magazine that can be planned for months in advance, but "news"-papers that cover both regular and "breaking" news stories.

However, with that being said, breaking news is always challenging because there is no lead-time and there is a tremendous sense of urgency to get as much information compiled as quickly as possible.

While the Cohasset Mariner is a weekly paper, we now have a web site "www.cohassetmariner.com" where we endeavor to post stories as they come in. Our web site, which continues to evolve, is a 24/7 operation!

About three years ago we started a Readers Advisory Network for both the Cohasset Mariner and the Hingham Journal, which are produced out of the same office in Hingham Square by essentially the same team. The RAN is compiled of email addresses of those who have signed up and enables us to send out a "broadcast" email seeking commentary, reaction or tips on news stories. Those who sign up only participate if and when they want to. If they do not have any information or thoughts for a commentary or story, they simply do not reply to the email. We also will remove anyone from the RAN if he or she requests that we do.

This week was a challenging one for us but one that was made easier by members of our RAN that helped us out. On Sunday there was the Cohasset Tri, which from the vast majority of accounts was a terrific day, although marred by the tragic death of a competitor and the injuries of two others, one of whom is still hospitalized. We put out a broadcast email to our RAN networks in both Cohasset and Hingham to find out any information we could from spectators and participants. We have been quite literally overwhelmed by the response – dozens and dozens replied and sent in upwards of 12,000 words on the Triathlon.

Tuesday morning two Hingham commuter boats collided in Boston Harbor. Once again, we used our RANs in Cohasset and Hingham as a resource and received first-hand accounts and photographs, many of which commuters took using their cell phones. Through contacts from RAN members we were able to talk to people on the commuter boat Massachusetts, as well as some commuters on the next boat. (Last June, we used the RAN to help us with our story on the commuter boat fire).

We have also used the RAN in the past for commentary, such as "Should smoking be allowed at Sandy Beach?" and "What makes Cohasset Village special?" We also used it for people to share their flood stories after the Mother's Day storm of 2006.

The RAN is a great way, we think, to involve our readers in the content of the newspaper and this week that has, once again, proved to be the case.

If you would like to join our RAN team, please send Mary Ford an email at mford@cnc.com.

When we send a broadcast email message, we send it so no one else receives your email address. We promise not to share your email address with anyone.

As an editor's note, due to the overwhelming response to our request for feedback on the triathlon, many of the commentaries in this week's issue had to be shortened for space reasons; others had to be left out altogether. Some came as letters to the editor. We tried to be fair and balanced. We will post all the commentaries and letters on line at www.cohassetmariner.com on the opinions page.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Rescue workers never forget

TO THE EDITOR:

When does human life stop being so important? When does a recreation event become more important than human life?

To a rescue worker, nothing is more important than human life. To a rescue worker, saving that life is the most important thing.

RESCUE by definition: deliver from danger or evil. Liberate n. act of rescuing.

LIBERATE by definition: means to set free.

Are we now a society that accepts loss of life? "Only a small percentage suffered," so we can call this recreation event a success? Am I hearing you correctly?! Only "one" person died. That person was a husband, father, and a son probably going home to a wonderful barbecue and celebration. He died at Sandy Beach, sacred ground to Cohasset. What's that you say? You can't wait for next year! I'm glad your dreams are full of happy thoughts.

You see, a rescue worker has restless nights. A rescue worker never forgets, and is always thinking of how to do better. I think it will be a long time before all the lifeguards, EMTs, fire department, police department, Harbormaster, volunteers and all those people who still value human life get themselves a good night's rest, with pleasant dreams.

Brought town together

TO THE EDITOR:

We are deeply grateful to Bill Burnett and his amazing team of volunteers for creating an extraordinary event to benefit juvenile diabetes research. Bill did more to raise awareness and understanding of juvenile diabetes in this last year working on the Tri than we could have ever imagined. When publicizing the event, he made JDRF front and center at every turn. The Tri raised over $45,000 dollars, which will go directly toward research that will help improve and possibly save the lives of countless people.

On a sad note, our hearts are heavy and our prayers are with the family of the athlete who died during the Tri. It is a tragedy that this could happen to someone going to such lengths to help a worthy cause.

Let us not forget in the wake of this unfortunate situation that the Cohasset Tri was an event that brought a town together to help hundreds achieve personal goals and raise money for the millions that struggle with juvenile diabetes every day.

Taking stock, celebrating life

TO THE EDITOR:

The death of one of my fellow competitors yesterday morning at the triathlon was truly a tragedy. I, as I know was the case for everyone there, was deeply touched by such an unfortunate and untimely passing. Just as all of us shared in the camaraderie and good feeling that was so much a part of the event, so we were all equally moved by the terrible fate that befell one of us, even if most of us did not know or had ever met him. It was one of those moments in life when you are forced to take stock of all we have, and to understand what a gift life itself is.

However, I genuinely hope, as I'm sure our departed comrade would had he survived to race another day, that his passing will not completely overshadow the remarkable excitement, "buzz", and true joie de vivre that was so much a part of this event.

The first Cohasset Triathlon was an amazing celebration of the incredibly beautiful town we are so fortunate to live in. It somehow engendered a sense of community and shared experience unlike anything I have experienced in the years I have lived in and around town. And, in the end, despite the tragedy that befell one of us and touched all of us, the day was in fact an amazing celebration of life. The best way for us to honor our departed friend will be to race here again next year, to have even more of Cohasset come out to enjoy the festivities, to cheer on and support all the racers from inside and outside of town, to help raise even more money for such a worthy cause, and most importantly to join in this celebration of life itself.

Keep the spirit of the Triathlon alive

TO THE EDITOR:

After more than 25 years of triathlon racing, I wanted to add some perspective to the Cohasset Triathlon last weekend.

We all have been deeply moved by the tragic death of one of the participants, and our thoughts are with his family during this difficult time.

Triathlons were founded in the 70's in San Diego and have become almost cult-like with tens of thousands of participants worldwide each year. The tragedy of this weekend only reminds us of the inherent risks of all sports, not just triathlons. Having participated in countless triathlons over the years, I was extremely impressed with the attention to detail regarding logistics, including the five-minute spacing in the swim, allowing more room for everyone, and I think the organizers should be commended for their efforts. Overall, this was a terrific event!

Right after the race I overheard multiple compliments from fellow racers about the volunteers, participants, and overall spirit of the race. I think Cohasset showed its true colors on Sunday with its warm welcome, and encouraging cheers to 700-plus racers.

If you have never seen a triathlon, and you should, it's inspiring to watch people accomplish something that they never thought was possible.

I hope we will all have the opportunity again in Cohasset next year.

Disruptions need to be minimized

TO THE EDITOR:

Over the past 8-10 years, living in Cohasset in the Spring through the late Fall can be a challenge for anyone who drives. The one thing certain is that major roads in the Town and out to Route 3A can be closed or have long delays due to the construction activities of the Water Department, the Rail Line construction, etc., including special "events" such as the Triathlon. There has to be a way to minimize, schedule or locate these activities to reduce the adverse impacts that has become a way of life in Cohasset, a way of life that really detracts from living here.

When one comes back from running an errand and finds no way to get to their house and has to park and walk home, that really is unacceptable, especially for seniors. Increased sensitivity by Town Fathers relative to ongoing, perpetual and special events and their impact on quality of life for residents is needed. It's not

Old sycamore tree must go

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

You may have noticed that one of the four giant sycamore trees in the Town Parking Lot looks terrible. The whole side of the tree facing the parking lot is essentially dead. There is one live limb toward the railroad tracks. We have had a variety of specialists look at the tree with an eye toward trying to save it. In the opinions of our Tree Warden and two arborists the tree is a hazard and cannot be saved. One of the things we looked at was the possibility of pruning the dead wood and letting the numerous new sprouts grow. However, we are told that sprouts don't mature into decent limbs, and the new sprouts will make it look like a giant lollypop. In addition, the interior of the tree has quite a bit of internal decay, and is structurally weakened. So, we are better off biting the bullet, removing the tree and replanting a new tree. That way, a new tree, with a smaller root structure can adapt to the site as it matures. Sycamore trees are very fast growers, so it will still take years to achieve the same stature as the dead tree. But, it's about the best we can do.

Now things really get interesting. When we went to check the availability of a new sycamore tree (also known as a buttonwood) we were hit by a twist of fate. It seems that sycamore trees grow so fast that they have been placed on the invasive species list of the Commonwealth and can no longer be brought into the state. But we were able to find a London plane tree, which is a cross between an oriental sycamore and an American sycamore, at a local nursery. To the novice, the London plane tree is indistinguishable from a sycamore. It has similar large leaves; the same beautiful mottled bark and will grow to a similar size.

One arborist who looked at the tree feels confident that the work the MBTA did in the parking lot disturbed the root structure and caused the tree to weaken appreciably. Consequently, we asked the MBTA to reimburse us for the loss of the tree, but they said no. So, it looks like we'll be replacing the tree in the near future. But, keeping what little green we have in the asphalt expanse of the Town Parking Lot just seems like the right thing to do.

The Great Manhole Hunt — One of the little tasks that had to be done before the old asphalt on Forest Avenue is removed is locating the manholes that have been hidden under the street for years. Whenever a storm drainage pipe changes its direction, even minutely or two or more pipes connect an underground structure must be buried so that these points can be accessed for maintenance purposes. Each of these access points has a manhole covered by a cast iron manhole cover. Now the plot thickens…When these manholes were first installed, the covers were set flush to the pavement. But, over the years Forest Avenue was repaved, repaved and repaved. To save money, the manhole covers were not raised back to be level flush with the top of the new paving. So, now we must locate all of these buried manholes so that we know where they are prior to the new paving. If we don't locate them the grinding operation to remove the old asphalt may tear up these underground structures. That is not a good thing and will add to the project cost to repair them.

Thus, this past week the DPW began the Great Manhole Hunt. They used a metal detector to locate the cast iron covers and then removed between 6 inches to over a foot of asphalt to verify the manhole location. This needs to be repeated at each possible manhole location before the road is ground.

Old giant sycamore has to come down.

Harbor Wall Fence — This past week the contractor who did the harbor wall repair between Atlantica and the Mill River Marina began installation of the new fencing along the new sidewalk. The enclosed photo shows the work in progress. You may note that for the initial installation the contractor is only completing every other section with both the wood and metal parts. Later on, the contractor will be adding the intervening wood components. Ultimately, copper caps will be added to each supporting vertical post.

A great event that should continue

COMMENTARY

ANDREW QUIGLEY

I am writing both as a lifelong athlete and as a first-time triathlon participant with regard to the tragic circumstances of Sunday's Cohasset triathlon.

First of all, the event was the most well run and well organized of its kind in which I ever have participated. Public safety personnel and volunteers were everywhere to ensure the safety of all of the athletes.

Second, a quick note about my personal views about health and safety: I think the seat belt law should be mandatory; trans fats should be banned; smoking should be banned at Sandy Beach; and the tough new laws pertaining to young people and speeding are good. In short, when it comes to matters of public health and safety, I'm a 9.99 on a scale of 10.

Third, however, there is no degree of preparation for any sporting event, whether it's Little League baseball or a triathlon that can take into account the human element, namely, whether this will be the day that the one in a million (or whatever) chance for a tragedy might occur.

All of us who took part in the triathlon knew that this would be a physical challenge, whether we were pushing ourselves to the max to finish in the top three in our age group or those such as myself who simply wanted to give it a try. But whether we run the Rotary Club's annual 10K or play pickup basketball for the better part of 90 minutes, all of us realize that no matter what kind of physical condition we may be in, if it's our time to go because of some heretofore undetected heart problem (such as Reggie Lewis), or hardening of the arteries (such as 1970s running guru Jim Fixx, who died of a heart attack while on a jog), or a freak accident (such as the high school hockey player who was struck by a puck in his chest a couple of years ago, stopping his heart), that's the risk we take for pushing our bodies beyond our normal limits.

Those who talk of not allowing the event to go forward next year may as well suggest that none of us get out of bed in the morning because the sky might fall in.

First timers such as myself found Sunday's triathlon, which was enjoyed by many hundreds of others besides the triathletes, to be both exhilarating and more difficult than we imagined; we'll be better prepared for it next year. On the other hand, when we saw the headline in Monday's Globe about the death of one of our fellow competitors, it dealt a blow to our gut. Still, if one were to have asked all 700 of the triathletes in Sunday's race whether the event should be cancelled in the future if someone were to fall victim to a tragedy, there isn't one of us who would answer in the affirmative.

Those who talk of not allowing the event to go forward next year may as well suggest that none of us get out of bed in the morning because the sky might fall in. Sunday's triathlon was a positive event for the entire community. Though the death of one of our fellow competitors cast a sad pall over the experience, it should serve to make us realize how fragile our existence on this earth is. Looking for blame is a fruitless exercise because there is no blame to be found.

I don't mean to sound trite, but the last thing I would want to see happen if something happened to me on a race course would be for my bad fortune to result in the denial of the pursuit of happiness for others. As my mother often told me, as she was dying of breast cancer: Live life to the fullest because life is for the living.

Andrew Quigley lives at 38 Jerusalem Road.

Words, words, words

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

See what happens when you have too much time on your hands.

Researchers at the University of Texas at Austin spent their spare time from 1998 to 2004 counting words as they tumbled from the lips of 396 students, 210 of them women and 186 of the other persuasion.

Their finding, published in Science magazine the other day with all the fanfare of Darwin announcing a new theory of evolution, was that the erstwhile strong, silent men and their others, significant or not, each utter the same average 16,000 words a day.

This, of course, flies in the face of the 2006 book, "The Female Brain," by neuropsychiatries Louann Brizendine, which theorized that female yakkers outyakked their male counterparts, 20,000 to 7,000.

"It's been a common belief but it just didn't fit," said James Pennebaker, one of those who had six years on his hands in which to count, and neurolinguistics experts have been assured that the old theory has been deleted from future editions.

I ask you, who says feminism is dead? And while we're at it, what is neurolinguistics? I speak as one who has devoted a lifetime to words when I say I never heard of it. But I digress…

The 16,000 word daily average sent me to the calculator where I discovered that averages out to 666.67 words an hour, 11.11 words a minute and 0.19 words a second, which in turn drove me to the Guinness Book of Records.

The world record for talking apparently is held by a fellow named Steve Woodmore of Orpington, England, who spit out 595 words in 56.01 seconds, or 637.4 a minute, on Sept. 22, 1990, during the British TV show "Motor Mouth."

Now there's a show for American TV to consider when those survivor shows run out of places to survive in.

The American record seems to be the property of one John Moschilla, who did 545 words in 55.8 seconds, or 585 a minute, in Los Angeles on May 4, 1988.

Strangely enough, I was unable to find any women record-holders, unless you can count Adrian Hilton, who was either an Englishman or an Englishwoman; you can't really tell from the name.

Anyhow, he or she recited the complete works of Shakespeare in 110 hours, 46 minutes, at a Shakespeare Festival in London On July 16-21, 1987, which Guinness accepts as the world record for reading aloud.

Me? I still have a hankering for the strong, silent types, like Calvin Coolidge, who would have been my favorite president if he weren't a Republican.

They say Silent Cal went to church one day and when he returned home his wife asked him what the preacher's sermon was about.

"Sin," said Cal.

"What did he say about it?"

"He's agin it."

Cal was attending a dinner one day when the woman seated next to him bet she would make him say three words. Cal waited until the dinner was over and they were leaving.

"You lose," he said.

And when Dorothy Parker, the writer with the acid wit, heard that Cal had died, she asked, "How could they tell."

Notice there is no Silent Sal.

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

When I learned that a man had died during Sunday's triathlon I felt sick, as everyone from Bill Burnett on down surely did. For days I've wondered how this could have happened. The race was extremely well organized and run; the weather was just about perfect. Very skilled people were on hand in case emergencies arose. There was every reason to expect the event itself would go as smoothly as the planning evidently had.

Instead it's been a sad, thoughtful week. The family's wish to grieve privately means we still know very little about our fellow triathlete, but what I'd like to say is that he was brave. He died trying to do a difficult thing for a good cause.

Our stories can end in so many ignoble, uninspiring ways, as random victims of nature or human malice. My prayer today is this: when I pass on, please let it be from pushing too hard, giving too much, aiming perhaps a little too high. A life spent on defense, idling, warm in my comfort zone, a risk-free, joy-free existence isn't for me, and it wasn't for Joseph either.

John Lengyel's column appears every other week in the Mariner.

Readers share their thoughts on the triathlon

Editor's note: Reader responses were edited for space reasons. Nearly all shared their concern for the man who died and the other two injured participants. The Mariner will try to post the complete responses on www.cohassetmariner.com

First triathlon

I just wanted to let you know what a great experience I had in my first triathlon. The Cohasset event was very well organized and executed. I raced with friends from work and we all met afterwards feeling proud of our efforts. Of course I am deeply saddened by the racer who lost his life and I hope that we can run the event in the future in his honor.

—Tim Hanson

Contagious enthusiasm

The extraordinary enthusiasm around the race was contagious and reflects the pride Cohasset residents have in their community and their beautiful town. I have participated in a number of sprint triathlons and the race organizers should be recognized for their vision, dedication and for the Herculean tasks they undertook to deliver an enjoyable and successful event. Due to a nagging injury, the race was difficult for me, but the pre-race buzz and day of the race energy I experienced clearly spilled over from participants to spectators alike.

—Susan Franklin

First-timer

As a first time triathlon participant and a resident of Cohasset, I cannot even begin to describe the thrill I experienced to be a part of the first ever triathlon in Cohasset! My husband, who was a spectator, could not stop talking about the race — saying "this is the best thing that has ever happened in Cohasset; they have to do this every year"!

Wouldn't it be wonderful if the recipient charity for next year's Cohasset TRI would be a scholarship/trust fund for the deceased gentleman's children/family? I heard this idea from a fellow Cohasset resident and could not agree more!

—Gwen Fitzgerald

Yearly tradition

I have been doing triathalons for over 20 years and this one was run exceptionally well. I hope the race continues on and it becomes a yearly tradition.

—Bill Cavanaro

Together

We have always wanted to do a triathlon together….Bill Burnett gave us that opportunity in our own backyard. Not only did he organize a great race, he managed to raise over $45,000 for juverüile diabetes. Bill's enthusiasm for the event inspired an entire community. Over the past few months you couldn't help but notice the growing number of people in town that were running, biking, or swimming in the early morning hours in preparation for the triathlon. We haven't witnessed any other event in town over the past six years that has motivated and rallied more people to a common good.

—Sarah and Gabriel Gomez

Praises for event

I just wanted to pass along my praises for the Cohasset Tri. As a participant it seemed to run perfectly. Bill did an unbelievable job! It was very sad that a fellow racer died, but I would hope that this would not hamper the town from hosting the event over the coming years.

—Garrick J. Towle

Great town

Cohasset is a great town to have this event in. I thank the residents around the entire course for their encouragement and I imagine they would welcome this event back again.

—Curt Dukeshire

Impressive

I have participated in different triathalons over the past 25 years and this event was as impressively organized and well run as any in which I have participated and many of these have been USTS events. I certainly hope that this will be a sustainable annual event.

—Steve Golden

Premier event

My family and I have had the great benefit of competing in the sport of Triathlon for nearly 20 years in races throughout the country. I can honestly say that Sunday's premier event in Cohasset was one of the finest, safest, well organized races I have ever competed in.

The helpful signage…the defective pavement markings…the railroad coverings...the shallow, close-to-shore swim course…the extensive Police Details…the enthusiastic crowd support and picturesque course layout…the multiple Water stops and Aid stations….all made up a terrific, safe and competitive race. The tragic loss that was suffered in Sunday's event should not diminish all of the hard work and tremendous sacrifice that Bill and his team of volunteers made to allow hundreds of athletes to do what they love best…chase their dreams.

—John Cavanaro

Great event

This was a great event for me as a first time triathalon participant. The course was well laid out and the event was highly organized. It is a great event for the town.

—Tom Koncius

Beautiful course

I have done several triathlons and I thought this was one of the most beautiful courses with friendly participants and volunteers. I don't want to minimize in anyway the sorrow the family of the man who died must be experiencing. The tragedy reminds you of the inherent risks in all sports and life.

—Mary Walters

First time

I competed in Triathlon this past Sunday. It was my first, so I can't compare it to others. I would say that it appeared to me to be very well organized with plenty of medical support as well as rescue personnel in the water.

— Doug Mclellan

A group of female competitors make their way through the water in the first leg of the Cohasset Tri on Sunday as a kayaker watches close by.

My first, her third

My wife Judy and I participated in the race — it was my first triathlon experience and her 3rd.

Judy did extremely well...a second place finish for overall women! Judy has raced before — 4 marathons, her previous 2 triathlons; none have been more meaningful and rewarding than this one. We are truly grateful to have had the opportunity to race, especially in our town. Judy and I would like to express our sincerest thanks to Bill Burnett for organizing, all the volunteers for executing, and the town for hosting (and of course the many others who helped to make the race a success). We hope to have the opportunity again in the future.

—Jon and Judy Stavis

Sadness

Sunday's triathlon meant immeasurable sadness for all due to the death of a participant. The event also meant great hope for a worthy cause due to the overwhelming response by participants, volunteers and our town. As a competitor I was proud of the funds earned, and the exposure gained for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. It is inspiring to see people go so far out of their way to make a difference around them. Thank you to the race organizers, the volunteers, the spectators who cheered (yes, it makes a big difference), and to all officials who made this event happen. It was a day of pride, tempered by tragedy, for all involved.

—Christine Cunning

Huge tragedy

First and foremost it is obviously a HUGE tragedy that a life was lost in Cohasset's first Triathlon. I really hope that after we all evaluate how we can make this event even better, that the town of Cohasset will allow this event to take place for many, many more years to come. As a first time participant, I would love to say what a very special event this was for me and I was just blown away with how it brought together so many people in such a positive manner. The fact that this first year event raised over $46,000 for Juvenile Diabetes is just amazing!

—Courtney Craft-Finn

Proud to take part

I was proud to participate in and complete Cohasset's inaugural triathlon as a resident of our small town.

The triathlon was a wonderful athletic event highlighting our old-fashioned common, scenic coastline and quaint Sandy Beach.

The day was perfect and I thank all race organizers, volunteers, sponsors, emergency personnel and supporters who made the entire event such an overwhelming success.

—Charlie Downing

Unified town

The countless hours that Bill and his endless team of volunteers paid off with a very well orchestrated event: arrival and registration were easy, each heat started in a timely manner and the transitions between events ran smoothly. As a regular jogger but first-time triathlete, I loved training for the triathlon and expanding my interest in sports to biking and swimming. The event provided a means to unify the town, to meet others and work toward a mutual, positive goal. My sadness for the family of the man who died extends to the all of the organizers and volunteers who did all possible to make the Cohasset triathlon a fun, safe event. I do hope that the Cohasset triathlon will continue for years to come.

—Carolyn Coffey

Unifying event

I got goose bumps when I entered the water for the Cohasset Tri, not because the water was cold, but because the event was such a showcase for what makes us love this town: geographical beauty, camaraderie, and a desire to make a difference in our world and in ourselves. The race brought me closer to friends and neighbors as we trained together in the weeks prior, and to friends and neighbors who gave of their time to volunteer or line the course to cheer us on race day. As saddened as I was by the tragic events of race day, I hope that we remember to honor his memory by continuing this race and the spirit that brought us all together.

— Dale Haver

Exciting event

It was the most exciting event I have seen in town in quite a while, on par with the annual road race. The volunteers did a great job planning and executing the event and the EMTs/Police, and Fire Departments were true professionals. Although the triathlon was tinged with tragedy, I hope we can continue the race in future years, perhaps in honor of the fallen athlete and his family.

—Doug Fitzgerald

Fantastic event

As a lifelong Cohasset resident, I was truly proud as I made my way through the course to see how much the entire town had rallied around us. People were out cheering with signs, others had their stereo systems blasting great music to keep us going, and some even made use of their hoses and sprinklers to keep us cool as we neared the finish! There were many Cohasset residents among the volunteers and safety officials who were all enthusiastic and helpful throughout the day, as well as many who donated generously in support of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. This was truly a fantastic event not only for the triathletes that participated in it, but also for the Town of Cohasset, and of course the JDRF.

—Lindy Holway

Showcased town

Few events could so effectively showcase all that is so special about our town: its scenic beauty, its energy, and most importantly its camaraderie, as evidenced by the overwhelming number of people that volunteered, cheered, and participated in this first annual event.

No one exemplifies these qualities like the tireless, dedicated, and contagiously enthusiastic Bill Burnett. All of us who swam, biked, and ran yesterday are grateful for the spirit of the very few like Bill who selflessly take on such a challenge. Like most of the participants, he was motivated by the fact that this event and its goal (raising money to find a cure for diabetes) really meant something.

—Barbara Wipf

Devastating tragedy

What a truly devastating tragedy to have lost someone during such a spectacular, perfectly organized event that is for such a great cause. Everyone who knows Bill Burnett knows that he put his heart and soul into this triathlon for the benefit of Juvenile Diabetes research and for Cohasset. I think that's a huge part of what made this a special event for our town. Unfortunately, there's nothing that could have been done to prevent this from happening – it was a random, awful tragedy. I hope the town will allow this great event to go on for years to come.

—Laurie Stanton

Great cause

We both participated in the Cohasset Triathlon. We could not have dreamed of a better experience for our very first triathlon. The day was beautiful, the course was challenging and scenic, the fans were supportive, and the event was so well organized from start to finish. We were thrilled to be a part of it all and for such a great cause! We hope to do it again next year.

—Todd & Pam Marshman

Well organized

The individual groups cheering and encouraging as I rode up South Main Street, the crowds cheering the runners at the corner of Highland and Beach, coupled with a beautiful day, a picture-perfect venue, and a really well organized event made for an incredible first mini-triathlon for me, though I am so shocked and saddened about the athlete who died.

— George Baumgarten

Third triathlon

The Cohasset race was my third triathlon, the other two being Hyannis and Duxbury. I thought that Bill and his race coordinators did an outstanding and above average job organizing and planning this race. Cohasset is truly a perfect venue for this type of event, and I feel that the race is a positive addition to our town.

— Nora Speer

Natural assets

What an outstanding and well-orchestrated race that made for a thoroughly enjoyable event for the two of us — both doing our first triathlon. This was a great way to share Cohasset's wonderful natural assets by both land and sea.

—Terry and Connor Green

Volunteers

It was wonderful to see so many volunteers from Cohasset at Sandy Beach, as well as, seeing my family and friends and so many families from the community along the bike/run route cheering us on. I hope Cohasset will allow this great event to continue in the spirit it was intended for years to come. I was very sad to hear the tragic news about the man that died and my heart goes out to his loved ones. I can only hope such a loss never happens again.

"this" or "that" specific activity or special event—its the cumulative, ongoing impact I'm addressing. We all talk about this unique Cohasset living challenge but it goes on year after year after year. I thought I would write about it for a change! I'm sure anyone who lives in Cohasset and drives knows the problem or nuisance, depending upon perspective!

Medical support, exceptional

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to thank Bill Burnett and his army of volunteers for making the first Cohasset triathlon a great success. I appreciated the detailed planning and smooth operation. The town provided excellent logistic support. I enjoyed seeing people training for the event. I hope the triathlon will become a local sporting tradition like the Cohasset Road Race, the Relay for Life and the Thanksgiving Run. These activities bring the community together, get people out exercising and showcase the town's beautiful scenery.

The unfortunate events during the swim were uncommon. The medical support provided by emergency physician Dr. Mike Hughes and the paramedics was exceptional.

Knowledgeable participant praises race

TO THE EDITOR:

I participated in the triathlon and it was my fourth race — all different courses. I am scheduled to complete two more races this year, so, although I am certainly no expert, I consider myself a knowledgeable participant. I am truly shocked that the swim event would have caused any problem, as it was one of the easiest swims I have done. The water was very calm. The distance was short. Due to the tides, you could run about half way in and half way out of the water. The actual swimming was probably equivalent to 6 or 7 laps at a 25-yard pool. The official distance of .28 miles is about 10 laps.

I thought the race was run superbly — particularly for a first time event. The one change I will recommend for next year was simply related to the transition area in which bike locations were assigned to coordinate with the swim waves. I don't like that because each wave of swimmers roughly leaves the water together and thus we are all in the transition area together, which adds to the congestion. Again, this is a minor, technical nuance.

It is very unfortunate that this tragedy occurred and I know I speak for the entire town in saying how sorry I am for the family. But I strongly believe there was more than enough safety measures in place throughout the entire race and think that Bill Burnett and the entire team did an incredible job. Separating this terrible loss from the rest of the event (which I know is difficult to do), I think this was an incredible showcase for out town. I heard many, many athletes praising all aspects of the course (although the hills on the run were universally cursed) and looking forward to next year's race.

One final note, I'm 35, so the fatality must have occurred during my wave of the swim. I did not encounter any more bumping or jostling during the swim than is typical when 96 people (the size of this wave) enter the water at the same time. I have heard rumors at other triathlons of being swam over, kicked, etc., but none of this happened to me Sunday.

Mike Krumsiek

An amazing experience!

TO THE EDITOR:

I think I speak for all of the almost 600 athletes who competed in Sunday's Triathlon at Sandy Beach when I say that the entire experience was amazing!

We were all saddened to hear about the tragedy of our fellow athlete and our condolences go out to his family.

I would like to personally thank Bill Burnett for all of the hard work and dedication that went into making this race such a success. This race was as professional as it gets and to only be in its first year, it was really remarkable to see it all come together so well. It was by far the best race I have ever competed in. From the perfectly executed start of 6 waves of swimmers on the beach, to all of the hundreds of volunteers, the well marked out and organized transition area, and the "x" outs on all of the potholes, cracks & other possible road hazards, the entire race was smooth, safe, and fun for the competitors.

The camaraderie among the athletes was amazing. It was hard not to catch the "tri-fever" that took over the town by the end of May. At any given time over the past 8 weeks there were groups of people out there practicing the swim course, bikers all over the road each nodding and extending a friendly wave to those passing the opposite way, and of course the runners. There are always runners out on our beautiful roads, but leading up to this race, we all knew that we were training for a similar goal. The competitors all came together sharing training tips and joining in the excitement of the race. It was fantastic to be a part of the buzz.

I would also like to thank the Cohasset community for coming out in droves to support us. I have never had so many spectators and fans out on a racecourse in my life. The Cohasset Common looked like it does during the Thursday Farmers' Market — it was packed with cheering fans. All along the steamy run course there were plenty of spectators handing out water not only at designated water stations, but from their homes, too. It was much appreciated. Bill did such a fantastic job of informing the community about the event. This was clearly reflected in the vast number of spectators all throughout the town. It was so fun to have everyone out there cheering us on. I loved every second of it.

So thank you, Thank You, THANK YOU!! to Bill Burnett for pulling together this athletic town and turning it into a community. Job well done!

Continue the Triathlon

TO THE EDITOR:

We recently moved our family within Cohasset and were introduced to new neighbors, Bill and Sig Burnett. Months earlier I had signed up for the Cohasset Triathlon both as a fitness benchmark and to support the good cause. It was immediately apparent to me when I met Bill that he was passionate about the JDRF cause, even though this does not afflict his immediate family, and about the spectacle of the Triathlon itself in our scenic town.

Bill had, as I understand it, envisaged such an event for four years. I couldn't begin to speculate on how much personal and family time he committed to coordinating this huge logistical undertaking. Yet he successfully organized the community around this event.

Dozens of volunteers accomplished the labor intensive tasks of setting up the transition area barricades and bike racks, and even used kids' sidewalk chalk to alert participants as to rocks protruding from the sand near the parking lot. Dozens more were on hand during the race and spectators lined the course in support. I expect the mechanical efforts paled in comparison to the administrative tasks of coordinating with the USAT, JDRF and local officials and registering and communicating with more than 700 participants who quickly filled the ranks to capacity months in advance of race day.

It was Bill's initiative and leadership that pulled both our community and our visitors together for the race. The amount of money Bill raised for JDRF is astounding, and I think goes to demonstrate the amount of good will he put forth. It is incredibly tragic that a participant lost his life on that day. I know that all closely involved offer their deepest sympathies and have themselves been severely impacted by this tragedy.

I've only just gotten to know Bill, but I know he organized this event out of the charity and responsibility he carries in his daily life. I'm sure we all hope that Bill continues to do extraordinary things. We should offer our full support and encouragement toward continuing this event for the benefit of our broader community, and in that spirit, make it that much more special.

Well organized event

TO THE EDITOR:

We are all very, very upset about what happened but I'm writing to you because I think it is important that people are aware of how well organized and planned this event was. This was the first tri I have competed in so I don't have much to compare it to, but from my perspective, communication was excellent prior to the race; we received multiple emails from the race director, Bill Burnett, regarding what to expect, how to prepare, etc. There were a lot of opportunities to learn more about the course, including a pre-race meeting last Sunday morning at Sandy Beach to help people better understand how everything was going to work. Bill emailed us numerous times to let us know what to expect with respect to the tide level, as well as that the buoys had been set up a few weeks ago so we could practice the swim. I, along with many others, was out there every day for the last week and a half swimming the course to prepare myself. (It was very unexpectedly scary the first time in the open water so I really wanted to be ready for anything.) I know that you do not always have the opportunity to practice the course ahead of time, so this was great.

Also, I'd like to note that, while I was preparing, the lifeguards at Sandy could not have been more helpful — twice one of them (a male, I don't know his name) came out on his surfboard to make sure I was doing all right in the course of my practice swim. He talked to me while I swam and it helped a lot. Also, I know they went through the course with other individuals who asked them to join them on their swims. They definitely worked harder in the last few weeks than they probably expected when they signed up to guard this summer (I know they had someone cramp up and had to rescue her one day)! So they should be commended too — although they did not work the race, they were very supportive during the weeks prior.

I know that Mr. Burnett worked very hard and raised a ton of money for a very good cause and I just want to make sure that in the wake of this tragedy all of the careful thought he put into making the tri a success does not go unapplauded. It was a beautiful day, the water was calm and (relatively!) warm and I felt the race was very well organized. As a competitor, there were no unexpected surprises.

New poles, lights near MBTA station

Five new poles for additional lighting will be constructed on North Main Street in conjunction with the MBTA station. The Board of Selectmen conditionally approved a revised petition from Mass Electric pending additional details on the lighting.

National Grid will own the poles and lights and the town will be paying the electric bill. The purpose of the new lights is to illuminate the new islands near the train tracks. The lights will have a downward focus.

The Selectmen's particular concern regarding new light fixtures is they are currently considering a purchase of street lights from National Grid as a possible money-saving venture.

Vice Chairman Ted Carr requested Mass Electric provide an approximate radius for the lights' glow, indicating five lights may be too many.

The representative from Mass Electric agreed to work with Greenbush liason, Mark Brennan, to pin down the radius and wattage to be used for the street lights.

Organization exemplary

I swam the last wave (relay and senior competitors) and found the swim to be orderly. The concern that there would be a lot of congestion in the water is not unique to Cohasset — all triathalons have a degree of bumping as the swimmers start out before they find their rhythm and place in the water. Rounding the turning buoy to swim back to the beach, I heard a kayaker offer assistance to anyone who cared to hang on the kayak for a breather. The five-minute interval between waves didn't pose an overlapping problem from where I stood before our last wave went in.

I thought Bill Burnett's organization of this event was exemplary from the briefing on the beach to the bus pick-up of competitors and spectators to return to their cars at the Music Circus.

— Jim Hamilton

Great cause

We participated in the triathlon at Sandy Beach. It was wonderful to see the town come together for such an event, cheer on all our peers or even just familiar faces. The enthusiasm and hustle and bustle around town before, during and after the event was fantastic! Mr. Burnett and all the volunteers did a great job for a great cause.

— Kim and Tom Spicer

Proud

It was so great to see so many people from different perspectives come together and execute such a great event. This was a truly grass roots driven affair that created a buzz across the South Shore and echoed by the 700 plus participants on race day. As the course dipped into all three towns, the supporters in Hull, Cohasset and Scituate were behind everyone and made the day that much more enjoyable. Three cheers to Bill Burnett, the town and volunteer crew that made this happen – I was very proud to be from Cohasset and have a connection to this great team.

—Willy Fox

Great crowds

While I was anxious about this upcoming event, my fears were assuaged as I biked into Sandy Beach 7:00 Sunday morning and greeted by calm and collective staff running the event. From volunteers helping me plug my handlebars (as I didn't know what that meant) to people taking my empty water bottles it was a day to remember. The Cohasset crowds were great cheering me on and the police did a great job directing traffic. The event was extremely well run, all operations were so smooth, the volunteers were extremely helpful and the music lifted my spirits. While I have been running for about 30 years, the Cohasset Triathlon was my first triathlon and will not be my last.

— Mary Sheridan

Outstanding job

I participated in the triathalon—it was my first and the beginning of more. Bill Burnett did an outstanding job. Everything was extremely organized, the volunteers were very helpful and overall it was a great experience. The double bonus of it all is that raised over $40K for a great cause. My hat is off to Bill and his team of volunteers. Look forward to participating next year!

— Laura J. Stone

Professionalism

As a Cohasset resident and triathlon participant this past weekend, I couldn't be more pleased with the professionalism of the Triathlon Committee and the volunteers. Of course as a first time event there are some logistical elements which may require some minor tweaking, but I'm sure those elements will be cared for over the next few weeks and months.

—Bill Doyle

60 triathlons

I have participated in over 60 triathlons spanning 10 plus years and I can say unequivocally that this was one of the best organized and safest I have competed in. The tremendous popularity of triathlons, especially for shorter distance events like the Cohasset Triathlon may unfortunately attract individuals who overestimate their abilities. Any endurance event comes with risk of personal injury which participants must and do hopefully acknowledge before signing up. Race organizers like Bill should be commended for minimizing those risks as best they can. I sincerely hope the event will be allowed to continue and that the town continues its support for Bill and the event he devoted so much work and energy to.

—Robert W. Simms, M.D.

Great opportunity

The race was a great opportunity to challenge yourself as well as bond with other people in town who were competing (or planning to watch and cheer). There was so much buzz and excitement leading up to the race and it was fun to be a part of that. Being able to enjoy and share the sense of accomplishment we all felt afterwards — regardless of our finishing time and place — was great as well.

— Jennifer Lankow

Top notch

I've done probably 20-30 tri's over the last 5 years, and this was a first rate event, absolutely top notch. The fact that it was this good, and in its first year, and from a first time race director is truly amazing. The buzz around town was awesome, and I even think this event had a bigger "feel" to it than the road race in April (which going what 25 years now?) Tragedies like this do happen however, (thankfully at a low incidence), and in most situations it has nothing to do at all with the race organization.

— John Flanagan

Admiration

There are many people who have ideas and few, like Bill Burnett who have the talent, energy and courage to follow through with their vision and execute an event like the Cohasset Triathlon. I witnessed the tremendous amount of time and dedication that Bill offered to creating this event for our community. I have a great deal of admiration for his commitment and determination to his dream of holding a triathlon in Cohasset. The event was a huge success for Bill, Cohasset, the over 700 athletes who participated, the volunteers, the spectators and for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation.

— Catherine O'Callaghan

Role model

As a mother, I love being able to model a fit lifestyle for my kids, and the event (and all the buzz leading up to it!) provided them a great example of moms and dads that they know getting out there and working hard to be healthy…and having tons of fun doing it! It was also great for my son to see how happy I was just to finish.

I'm a back-of-the-packer, and it was much better for me to show him that sports and athletics can be fun even if you're not the star of the team, rather than just give him another Mom Lecture. Seeing an event like this in our own backyard was a wonderful way to expose our kids to all the fun that being healthy and taking care of your body can be.

— Mel Barrett

Special day

I have competed in a few triathlons, including last year's race in Hull. The Cohasset Tri was a fantastic experience. I had my doubts about how smoothly things would go in the morning with the number of racers versus the number that were at Hull (approximately 450). Even with more racers in Cohasset things were infinitely smoother and more organized.

Being able to compete in the event in my town with many friends competing as well was incredibly fun and made for a special day. I look forward to the opportunity to compete again next year.

— Dave Frederick

Incredible job

Bill Burnett did an incredible job of organizing it right down to the last detail. For example; the big signs clearly denoting the swim area, and the time between swim groups was intelligently considered so that the water was not to crowded at any given time. A lot of stress was relieved in assigning each athlete his own labeled bike space in the transition area. Volunteers located at key important areas on the bike course were well prepared to caution us and point out the way. Mile markers for the run course allowed us to pace ourselves. Plenty of water was available during the run and some spectators were there t help with water hoses to cool us down if wanted.

The website was informative and easy to navigate and the pysch sheet was a great touch. I referred to both often to look for changes and additions. The pre-race meeting was also informative and appreciated. My experience with the volunteers, athletes and officials was one that made me proud to be an athlete and to live in Cohasset. They were considerate, enthusiastic and professional.

I am deeply sympathetic to the tragedies associated with the triathlon. My prayers are with their families.

— Kimberlee Alemian

Best organized

I have participated in 40-50 races in my lifetime, including marathons, 10Ks, swimming and Bike Races. Sunday's Cohasset Triathlon was BY FAR the best organized, most professionally run event I have ever encountered.

From the start to the finish, there were friendly volunteers at every turn, showing racers the way. The start/transition areas were well organized and looked great. The swim went off in 6 different stages to spread out the number of swimmers in the water at any 1 time. On the course, EVERY pothole, bump and crack was clearly marked. Even the train tracks on North Main Street which have caused issues for cyclists in the past had been dealt with: bikes were rerouted to hit them straight on, and with a plush mat to carry riders over the tracks with no trouble.

— Brad Thomas

Grew up here

I grew up here in Cohasset and had never done a triathlon before. I had the most incredible time swimming, biking and running/walking in my hometown and all for such a great cause. I felt such wonderful support from family, friends and all the volunteers yesterday.

— Abigail Hobson Alves

Important cause

The sun shone brightly on a beautiful, calm day. I stood on the beach with hundreds of others – excited, nervous and proud. Excited to challenge myself physically and mentally, nervous to do something I have never done before, and proud to know people like Bill Burnett, and many of the other volunteers, who have the energy and enthusiasm to create a great day in support of an important cause. The sadness I have at the tragic death of a participant is a painful reminder that life can be short and unpredictable and I plan to spend it by continuing to challenge myself, hopefully at the second Annual Cohasset Tri.

—Deb Bowen

Wondering 'why'

I've participated in many of these kind of races over the years and have experienced varying degrees of race organization. When I heard that Bill Burnett was contemplating a triathlon in Cohasset I called him to warn him how much work is involved in orchestrating this kind of event. Bill and his team did an amazing job in my opinion and as a result this was one of the most well organized events I've ever participated in — the course was blanketed with volunteers and public safety workers. The swim course was set up weeks in advance to give people a chance to practice, and a special pre-race session was offered last week with professionals available to answer questions about the race and what to expect on race day. The water conditions [in the] morning were near perfect for swimming and the starting waves were well-spaced out. It seems to me that what happened was one of those senseless tragedies that leaves you shaking your head wondering "why".

— Matt Steele

Hooked

What a day. My relay partner and I are hooked. As first timers in such an event, the competition and fan support along all legs of the race were tremendous. My kids made signs and I got a high five from my wife coming out of the water. Everybody was so supportive. Our accomplishment was pushing our hardest and completing the race; which will not be our last.

—Stuart Sanderson

First time

I participated in the event this year and would love to see it come back. Like the annual road race, participants and the cheerers have a good time. One nice thing about this is that it covers so much ground. A wider range of people can sit on their front lawns and watch/cheer.

— David E. Lord

Well run

Though marred by an incredibly tragic death, the race was amazingly well run, showcased the best of our town, and our residents. I am a resident and participated. I got a flat in my tire on Rte.228 and a race volunteer and Cohasset resident, literally gave his car to a complete stranger, me, so that I could drive to get assistance in picking up my bike! If that's not a strong endorsement to the kind of town we live in, I don't know what is!

We had over 15 family and friends drive down for a day of cheering and BBQ'g. It was a great day, and I hope the town will support its renewal.

— Al Stefan

Greatly enjoyed

My name is Chelsea Grossman, a 19-year-old from Cohasset who participated in the triathlon yesterday. I just want to say that it was an exhilarating experience I greatly enjoyed. For me, it was a test to show what my body and mind are capable of and I feel not only accomplished, but also truly proud for having completed it.

Despite the tragedy that occurred during the swim, I thought it was a well-organized event with a perfect combination of swimming, biking, and running to challenge athletes.

— Chelsea Grossman

Success

I thought the first Cohasset Tri was a huge success. I participated in the relay and had a great time. The day was very well organized and laid out well. Many thanks to Bill Burnett for all his hard work in putting this event together.

—Shelly Mahoney

Family day

It was great to be part of the Cohasset Tri. Not only is Cohasset a wonderful venue for the event, but it is a perfect family activity. My daughter, my husband and I all had an awesome race! And my other two kids are looking forward to participating next year.

— The Healys

Unforgettable

The Cohasset Tri was an unforgettable experience for me. Right from the onset of the announcement of the tri it became the talk of the town. The tri brought everyone in the community together from the participants, volunteers, spectators, neighbors, friends and family and people of all ages.

—Deb Donahue

$25,000 state grant to look at housing possibilities

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"If we do this right by the time we get to Town Meeting everyone who has a strong interest in the village has been part of this process."
–Angus Jennings, village consultant

The issue of housing in the village — what's there and what possible — is at the forefront of the village consulting project. As the project reaches its halfway point, the town just received a significant boost in funding to explore housing and architectural possibilities, as well as an in-depth market analysis.

In conjunction with this initiative, the town, with the help of its consultant firm, Concord Square Development Company, applied for a Priority Development Fund grant from the Department of Housing and Community Development. Last week, the $25,000 grant came through allowing the project to expand its purview to include architectural renderings and more detailed design guidelines.

The grant nearly doubles the project budget. $30,000 in funds was initially approved at last fall's special Town Meeting.

Angus Jennings, principal planner at Concord Square Development Company, has tapped Carr, Lynch and Sandell, a Cambridge-based architectural firm, for the project. James Sandell, a principal for the firm, is also a Cohasset resident who has done substantial work in Cohasset, said Jennings.

"They will bring tremendous depth to the project design and end result," said Jennings in a phone interview. Jennings expects the architect to make recommendations for specific design guidelines, setbacks and rooflines in the village.

The architect will be able to graphically depict design objectives to make the language of the bylaws and the intent of the bylaw changes more visual. The renderings will be rough conceptual drawings to show the type of development that will strengthen the overall vitality of the village, said Jennings.

For example, one of the key concepts is creating a second front for the part of the village facing the town parking lot will be portrayed in schematic form by the consultants. Portion of the village in the public realm (i.e. sidewalks, signage, lighting, pedestrian connections) will be focused on as well.

"If someone wants to invest in the village, they'll want to build something worth their while," and the drawings and proposal of design guidelines will help set parameters for development and what will work best in the village business district, explained Jennings. In addition to the illustrations, Carr, Lynch and Sandell will review and provide "a critical analysis of the zoning bylaws," said Jennings.

Phase one of the project — defining the existing conditions of the village — is substantially complete, Jenning told the Planning Board on Wednesday evening. Through their research they have determined what was up to now an illusive number—there are 29 rentals and 15 temporary units (from the Red Lion Inn) in the village area. Phase two will have the consultants drafting policies and bylaws that will need to be complete by early September to get on the fall special Town Meeting warrant.

Jennings reported his team is on schedule to present draft zoning bylaws and suggested changes by September 1. He expects to bring his conceptual zoning ideas before the Planning Board in August, hear feedback from the board and the public, and then follow up with more firm language as Labor Day approaches.

Concord Square hopes to continue to include the public, from property owners to merchants to concerned citizens, through a series of public forums. He plans on appearing at every Planning Board meeting to discuss the project status.

"If we do this right by the time we get to Town Meeting everyone who has a strong interest in the village has been part of this process," said Jennings.

"The simpler the zoning bylaws can be proposed, the better," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, indicating the intent of longer bylaws get lost in verbiage. Zoning bylaw additions and changes require a two-thirds approval from Town Meeting.

A design workshop, scheduled for late August (date and time yet to be determined), with Carr, Lynch and Sandell will be "an opportunity for landowners, business owners and concerned citizens to come together with town officials to look in detail at what they would like to see happening in existing buildings and lots," said Jennings.

Fight the bite: Prevent EEE and West Nile Virus

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

EEE is considered the worst type of encephalitis. The mortality rate is about 35 percent in humans and even higher in horses. It is especially bad in children.

Think West Nile virus is "old news"? Think insect repellent is too much trouble? … Think again!

On July 4th, 2007 a mosquito sample was collected in the town of Raynham in Bristol County. The sample included Culiseta melanura mosquitoes, which are considered bird and not people biters. While this is an early appearance for Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE), overall mosquito numbers are down for this time of year.

EEE is considered the worst type of encephalitis. The mortality rate is about 35 percent in humans and even higher in horses. It is especially bad in children. Fortunately, large and widespread outbreaks are uncommon; the 24 years between 1961 and 1985 produced only 99 confirmed human cases in the United States. In 2006, several human cases of EEE were confirmed in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, prompting public safety fears after several fatalities. Five human cases including one death have been reported in Massachusetts.

However, mortality statistics tell us that West Nile Virus (WNV) is the greater threat. WNV mortality rate in the U.S. has been about 5 to 10 percent. WNV has been documented in the U.S. since 1999 and has been found in all 48 mainland US states, Washington DC and Puerto Rico. Number of humans affected and the areas of intense activity change from year to year.

WNV is more serious to older patients. Last year Massachusetts reported 4,269 human cases with many more fever cases unreported — the second highest total of WNV cases in the U.S. so far, and an increase of about 1200 cases from the previous year. Cases have already been reported in 2007.

Notice! Don't expect spraying by mosquito control programs to do very much about lessening the chances of infection by either virus! At best they only destroy some existing mosquitoes and some larvae, the effect lasting no more than a few days. They also give incautious people a 'safe' feeling so they neglect to use real preventative measures: insect repellent and treatment of clothing.

Use Insect Repellent! We all know the excuses – "I forgot to bring it with me…", "It smells yucky…", "Isn't that stuff bad for you?"… Instead, try these suggestions:

Make it easy. Put repellent in convenient places — on the patio, with your camping equipment, in your backpack – so you'll have it when you need it. It's worth that extra minute to go back and grab repellent, rather than risk getting West Nile fever and feeling bad for weeks or even getting a more serious disease.

Check out the available repellents. Many repellents, such as those containing low concentrations of DEET and those with picaridin, have no scent, or very little, except for mosquitos which don't like it. Repellents do not kill mosquitoes. The active ingredients in repellents make the person unattractive for feeding. Repellents are effective only at short distances from the treated surface, so you may still see mosquitoes flying nearby. Repellants may need to be re-applied if you spend more than a few hours outdoors. Always follow the directions.

Let's put things in perspective — What's bad for you is getting a WNV infection. All repellents registered by EPA are tested for both efficacy and safety, and the standards for safety are very high. It is estimated that there have been billions of applications of DEET since it was introduced over 50 years ago. Always follow label instructions (such as keep out of eyes, mouth; wash off when returning indoors). They are important tools to keep you safe from the very clear risk of WNV present throughout the mainland US. For more details about DEET and other repellents see the EPA's Web site.

A little known but very useful trick: Look for permethrin to treat clothing that you wear outdoors a lot, as well as gear (tents etc.) Permethrin treatment lasts through several washings and can also help protect you from ticks and other blood-sucking bugs. Again, follow label instructions.

Mosquito-Proof Your Home! Make sure you don't have standing water around that can give mosquitoes a place to breed. Empty those flowerpot saucers and buckets; clean forgotten swimming pools and gutters. Also make sure your window and door screens are in good shape, keeping mosquitoes outside.

See the Mass. WNV Web site for maps showing WNV human infections each year by county.

Please follow Little Harbor rules

To all boaters and residents of Little Harbor, as you are aware, Little Harbor is very special and hopefully always will be. However, the harbor will need the cooperation of all to keep it that way.

The following bylaws were voted at town meeting so that the people who like to swim, sail, kayak, canoe and enjoy other water activities, without the concern of fast operating powerboats, could enjoy the harbor.

Article 7, section 32 states: "Jet skis, surf jets, and water bikes shall not be operated at a speed in excess of twelve miles per hour while in the confines of the harbor."

Article 9, section 5 states: "No person shall operate a boat in Little Harbor white towing a water skier, aqua plane or other similar device except on even numbered days." An easy reminder is even: fast and odd: slow.

In addition, Little Harbor has a wide variety of birdlife, many of whom nest on the islands and rocks. Recently, the terns have resumed nesting in the harbor, which is a very welcome sight after many years of absence. It is important to their species that these nests are not disturbed.

And lastly, in spring and late summer many shore birds find Little Harbor's sand flats a vital feeding ground on their long migration as far as Central and South America. Dogs running and chasing them, although fun for the dog, interrupt their ability to build the necessary fat and energy reserves to continue migrating. Please respect their need to feed and rest in order to prepare for the long trip south.

Letter signed in support of Treat's Pond project

The Board of Selectmen have penned and signed a letter to US Representative William Delahunt to convey its support for additional funding to restore Treat's Pond. Vice Chairman Ted Carr wrote the letter on behalf of the Selectmen.

"…the Board of Selectmen have met and voted to support the Army Corps project provided that Federal funding for the Section 206 project be available this year," states the letter.

Although the Selectmen wrote to communicate support of the project and $700,000 federal funding, the method the project will implement is yet to be determined. Viable proposals include a pipe with an outfall in the inner harbor or a pipe to the outer harbor (via Whale Meadow).

If the federal funds come through, the project and the town's matching funds will need approval at a future Town Meeting. The town appropriation is estimated to be around $400,000.

A $250,000 congressional appropriation was initially provided to the town so the Army Corps of Engineers could begin the planning of the project. The addition $700,000 federal funds, coupled with the town funds would complete the project. In addition to restoring the salt marsh, the Army Corps has said the project would relieve some of the flooding in the area during major storm events.

Over 100 Cohasset athletes complete Sunday's triathlon

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Nearly 600 athletes finished Cohasset's first ever triathlon Sunday morning, with 105 of them hailing from the host town.

And three of those Cohasset residents – John Flanagan, Rob Simms and Theodore Noon – finished in the top-10.

Flanagan completed the quarter-mile swim, 12.5-mile bike ride, and 3.2-mile run in 1:01:15, good enough for fourth place overall. Simms finished seventh with a time of 1:02:23, with Noon finishing 10th at 1:04:15.

Cohasset's Judy Stavis, meanwhile, was the second woman (and 43rd athlete overall) to cross the finish line, finishing with a time of 1:10:47. Stavis' husband, Jon – who finished just over five minutes after Judy – said in an email to the Mariner the event was a memorable one.

"From the moment we arrived on race day, everything went smoothly," Stavis said. "Anything we needed was there, from information beforehand to refreshment after - all due to the extremely hard work of the organizers and volunteers."

The rest of the top-10 Cohasset finishers included John Cavanaro (1:09:30), Jim Mitterando (1:10:48), Kevin Wrenn (1:12:08), Greg Weissman (1:12:42), Nils Sceery (1:12:52), and Dale Haver (1:12:52).

Cohasset's Gwen Fitzgerald begins the cycling portion of Sunday's triathlon. After a quarter-mile swim, a 12.5-mile bike ride awaited the athletes, followed by a 3.2-mile run.

Wrenn, running his second triathlon (the first coming last year in Hull), said he was pleased to come in 63rd place overall.

"I was surprisingly happy with the swim and bike parts of it. The run was a little more difficult than I expected it to be, but overall I'm pleased," Wrenn said Wednesday. "Normally in running races with 700 or so participants I come in around 200th, so this was a good finish for me."

The experience level of Sunday's participants varied greatly. Many, like Pam and Todd Marshman of Cohasset, were new to the triathlon experience.

Legion team can't hold on

Upset bid against Braintree falls short

By Win Bates
CORRESPONDENT

It has not been the best of seasons for the Cohasset American Legion Post 118 baseball team this summer, but when Post 118 scored a pair of runs in the bottom of the first inning to take a 2-0 lead over perennial power Braintree in Monday's Zone 6 East clash at Scituate High School, there was hope for a major upset for the home team.

But visiting Post 86 didn't let that happen. Braintree scored single runs in the second and third innings to pull even and then broke the tie to take the lead for good with a pair of runs in the fifth to go on to a 5-2 win and maintain its grip on second place in the zone.

Overall, it was a good performance for Post 118, who hung tight with one of the top teams in the area. Unfortunately, Cohasset couldn't score any more runs against Braintree's ace right-hander Dan Newman after the first inning.

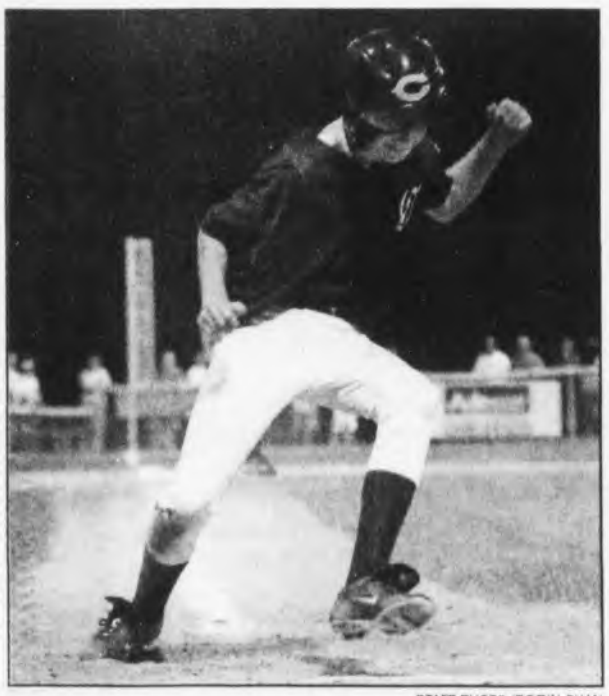
"Our hitting has been our strength all season and our pitching has been our weakness," said Post 118 coach Bill Signorelli. "Tonight we got a strong performance from Jeff Simpson in his first start of the season, but we didn't hit in the clutch when we had chances to score more runs."

The game got off to a promising start for the hosts when they reached Newman for a pair of runs in the first inning. Pat Doonan led off with a double to the left-field fence and took third on Robert Dongara's single to center.

Dongara went all the way to second on the throw to the plate, but when Newman struck out the next two batters, it looked like he might get out of the jam unscathed.

However, an error on Mike Signorelli's ground ball scored Doonan to make it 1-0, and Dongara scored on a wild pitch to give Cohasset a 2-0 lead and the upset possibility was there.

Braintree cut the lead in half in its next at-bat when Chris Dominguez led off with a single, stole second and went to third on a wild pitch. He scored on Dan Gaughan's single.



Braintree tied it in the next inning when Ryan Urso walked, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Kevin Lyons' single off the fence in center field. A good relay from Chris Morgan to Marcus Joyce to Doonan nailed Lyons trying to stretch the hit into a double, but the game was now tied.

Meanwhile, Cohasset couldn't get the lead back even though it had hits in each of the next four innings after scoring the two runs in the first. A one-out single in the second by Ken Muir yielded nothing for Post 118, and Cohasset also failed to score in each of the next three innings despite leadoff singles in each inning.

Ryan Little led off the third with a single, but Newman got the next three batters. Morgan started the fourth with a single, but was then erased attempting to steal second.

After Braintree took the lead in the top of the fifth, Doonan led off the fifth with a bunt single and Justin White drew a two-out walk, but Newman got Signorelli to ground out into a force play, and that would be Cohasset's last chance as Newman retired the last seven batters he faced to complete a seven-hitter and improve his Cohasset's Conor Dooley pumps his fist as he crosses home plate with his team's first run of the game Wednesday night against Braintree American. Cohasset scored again in that top of the fifth to tie the game at 2-2, but Braintree pushed across four runs in the bottom of the frame to earn a 6-2 victory.

Little leaguers still in the mix

Cohasset Williamsport squad beats Weymouth, falls to Braintree

The Cohasset Williamsport team hung on for a hard fought 6-5 victory Friday night over archrival Weymouth American in Stoughton. With the win Cohasset advanced to the finals of the winner's bracket. Wednesday night, July 11, the squad lost, 6-2, to perennial favorite Braintree American at Hollingsworth Field in Braintree.

Having defeated the hard-hitting Weymouth squad in the Distrct 8 11-year-old finals last year Cohasset knew it had to be on top of its game this time around. Christian Davis, as he has done every game in this tournament, led off the first inning with a single. Nick Tangherlini followed with his third home run of the tournament to give Cohasset an early 2-0 lead.

In the top of the second inning, Weymouth responded with a solo home run of its own to close the deficit to 2-1.

With two outs and nobody on in the bottom of the second inning, Davis and Tangherlini each singled allowing Connor Goetz an opportunity to knock in a run. With the count 3-and-1, Goetz drilled his second home run of the tournament to deep center giving Cohasset a 5-1 lead.

Weymouth wouldn't go away though as it scratched out two more runs to cut the lead to 5-3.

Cohasset managed a very important insurance run in the fourth as Goetz (four RBI) knocked in Davis (three hits) for a 6-3 lead.

In the top of the fifth with Jamie Timothy nearing his limit in pitches, Weymouth got two men on base. Tangherlini relieved Timothy, and after allowing a single to make it 6-5 he worked his way out of the inning stranding two runners on base.

Cohasset entered the final inning clinging to a 6-5 lead. With sweat pouring down and fans pacing the parking lot, Tangherlini walked the first batter and the next batter singled. With runners on first and second, no outs and Weymouth's #3 hitter up at the plate, Tangherlini fell behind 3-0 on the batter. After inducing a foul ball and a called strike the Weymouth player lined a shot to the left field gap. Luckily for the hometown team Jack Kuppens raced over and snagged the liner and then fired a bullet to Colin Gideon-Murphy at second doubling the runner off of second base for a much needed double play. Tangherlini with a very large smile back on his face, induced a fly ball to Connor O'Brien in right field to secure the 6-5 victory.

As usual for Cohasset all 12 players contributed in different ways. Danny Barnes, Mike O'Brien, Davis and O'Brien all tracked down flies in the outfield. Shane Haggerty held down the fort at the shortstop position, with a highlight film diving stop of a potential single up the middle. Timothy gaining his second victory of the tourney, while Tangherlini picked up his second save.

Date and location for the Cohasset Williamsport team's next game was unavailable as of press time. Log on to www.cybsa.net for up-to-date information.

of a better experience for our very first triathlon," Pam Marshman said in an email to the Mariner. "The day was beautiful, the course was challenging and scenic, the fans were supportive, and the event was so well organized from start to finish. We were thrilled to be a part of it all and for such a great cause! We hope to do it again next year."

Similar sentiments were expressed Wednesday by Weissman, who competed in his first Ironman Triathlon in Hawaii in 1982. A competitive swimmer at the time for Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Weissman was intrigued by the grueling challenge that event offers: a 2.4-mile swim, a 112-mile bike ride, ending with a 26.2-mile marathon run.

As for Sunday's event, Weissman – who has done similar races in Duxbury and Hull, and will do them again in September – said one of the things that struck him was the support from the fans that lined the roads of the town throughout the course.

"I thought it was great to see Cohasset come together to cheer and encourage everybody," Weissman said. "It showed the true colors of Cohasset, in a positive light."

record to 4-1.

The decisive rally for Braintree in the top of the fifth saw P.J. Mullin get it going by beating out a bunt, and he made it all the way to third when Tom Huddleston followed with a bunt base hit.

Ryan Urso's sacrifice fly scored Mullin to give Post 86 a 3-2 lead, and after Brendan Wheeler walked and Lyons was hit by a pitch to load the bases, Dominguez hit into a strange 4-6-5 double play after Doonan dropped his pop fly, but then picked up the ball, forced Lyons at second and then threw out Wheeler trying to advance to third.

However, because the play at third was a tag play and Huddleston scored before Wheeler was tagged out, the run counted and Braintree was up 4-2. Braintree's final run in the sixth came when Cam Fox singled, stole second and went to third on a throwing error on the steal, and scored on a sacrifice fly by Gaughan.

Simpson scattered 10 hits as he also went the distance, walking five and striking out six in a solid effort against one of the zone's top hitting teams.

"Jeff did a nice job against a very good Braintree team," said coach Signorelli, whose team is now 4-13. "He has been pitching in relief for us, but we gave him the start tonight and he held them down pretty good."

Signorelli is optimistic about the future for Post 118.

"Everyone who is on this team now is eligible to play next year, and we may have a few other players on the team next year who didn't play for us for one reason or another this year," said the head coach. "I really believe if we have all the players I think we will have, we will finish above .500 and make the playoffs next year."

This report submitted by the Cohasset Post 118 coaching staff.

"I really believe if we have all the players I think we will have, we will finish above .500 and make the playoffs next year."
Post 118 coach Bill Signorelli

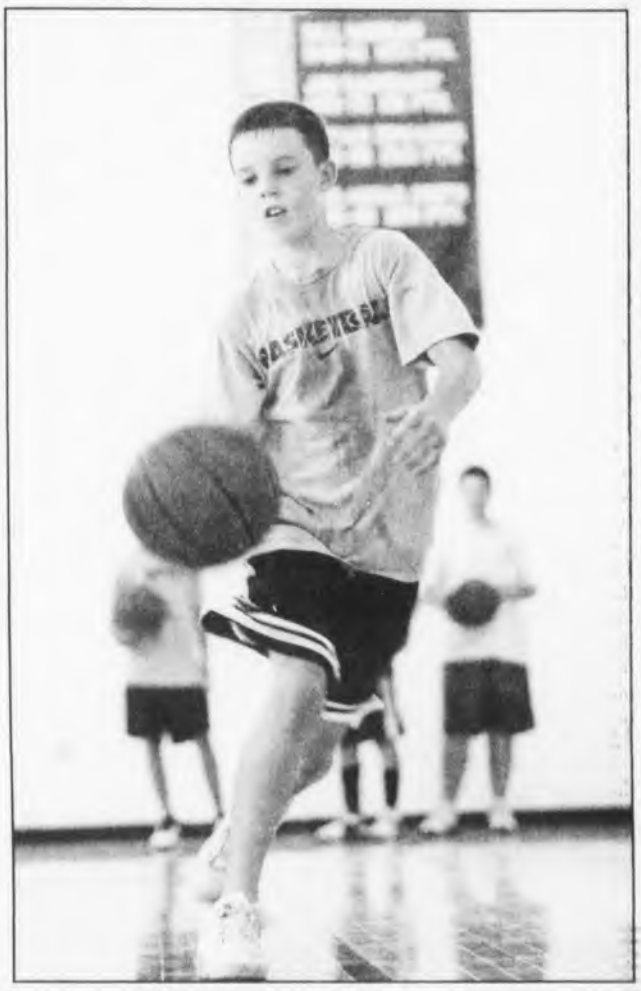
In a dramatic comeback win Cohasset Post 118 beat Holbrook last Friday, 19-13, by scoring 12 runs in the top of the seventh inning.

Sam DeGiacomo pitched five innings, giving up seven runs on eleven hits striking out three. Simpson pitched one inning, giving up five runs on three hits and striking out one batter. Coady Morgan picked up the win in relief, pitching one inning and giving up one run on two hits.

In the bottom of the sixth, Holbrook picked up five runs on three hits and three walks to take a 12-7 lead. And then came the rally to end all rallies.

In the seventh inning, Justin Whyte was hit by a pitch, Michael Signorelli singled and Pinkus was hit by a pitch to load the bases. Chris Barrow singled to score Whyte to make the score 12-8. Brad Sportack singled to score Signorelli and Pinkus to make it 12-10. Joyce singled to score Barrow and Sportack to tie the score at 12-12.

Simpson singled and Morgan walked to load the bases again. Little walked to score Joyce and to take the lead 13-12. Whyte singled to score Simpson to make it 14-12. Signorelli singled to score Morgan and Little to make it 16-12. Barrow singled to score Whyte to make it 17-12. Joyce capped it with a double to score Signorelli and Barrow.



Camp-goers listen and observe Wednesday morning as CHS boys basketball coach Dorian Bryant teaches the finer points of the drop step move, just one of many lessons Bryant is covering at his Big Man and Point Guard basketball camp this week at the high school.

Gone campin'

All this week, Cohasset High School boys basketball coach Dorian Bryant has been conducting a Big Man and Point Guard Camp at CHS. Young players from across the South Shore have turned out to learn many of the skills that helped make Bryant a standout during his days at CHS in the 90's.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by Cohasset Historical Society

On July 16, 1953, the Cohasset Historical Society sponsored a landmark tour highlighting 14 historic properties in Cohasset. On that day, the public was invited to tour the interiors of the properties as well as the exterior spaces. Artifacts from the Historical Society's collection relating to the properties were placed on display within each house. In addition, guests were entertained by docents who shared legends about the houses on the tour.

Today, we invite you to drive, bike or stroll along the shore and see how many of the homes you can locate. With the aid of the 1953 tour map and the map key below you should have some success.

Captain John Wilson House – At 4 Elm St., the house is a village colonial of unusual design. Its ground floor was used as a ship's chandlery.

Job Turner House – At 181 Border St., this house was floated by barge from Boston to Cohasset then moved twice. Its present site is believed to have been the summer camping grounds of the Quonahassit Indians.

Aubrey Crocker House – At 40 Parker Ave., this was once the home of Cohasset Colonials and the Hagerty Company.

Government Island – This was the assembly site for Minot's Light and provides a fine view of Cohasset Harbor.

Old Salt House and Landing – At 40 Border St., the house and landing are nostalgic reminders of the bustling fishing and shipbuilding days when salt works played an important part in the town's livelihood.

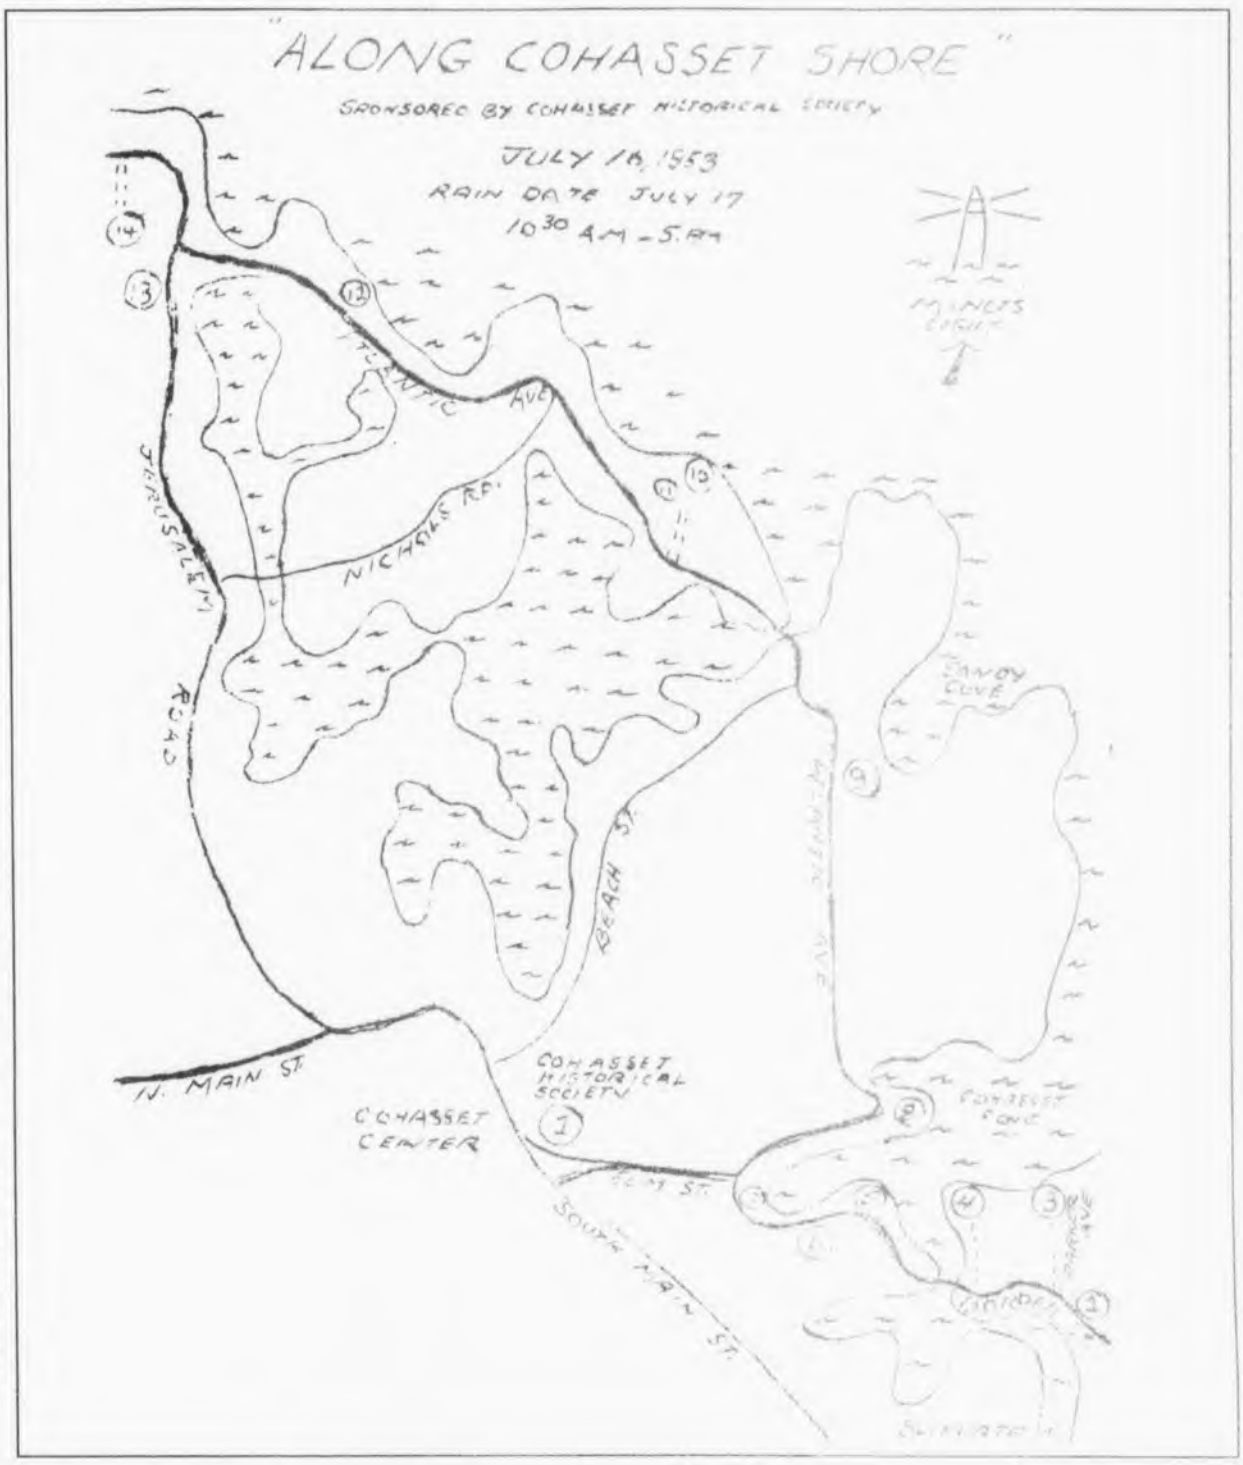
John Bates Ship Chandlery – Once located on Border St., the building was moved in the 1950's to Elm Street and now houses the Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum.

The Independence Building – At 24 South Main St., this building was Cohasset's first fire station, which later housed the police department and town jail.

49 Margin St. – The location of a shipyard and later Clarence W. Barron's Victorian mansion.

Lothrop-Whittington House – At 159 Atlantic Ave., this building was an inn in 1849 when survivors of Cohasset's worst shipwreck, the Brig St. John, were brought there.

Susan Higginson Nash House – At 255 Atlantic Ave., this house was built in 1720 and moved from Norwell.



Chauncy Nash House – At 257 Atlantic Ave., built circa 1740 in New Hampshire and moved to Cohasset in 1925.

The Boathouse – At 311 Jerusalem Road, this building was built by Matthew Luce, an early summer resident circa 1870 and was favorite gathering place for sportsman during the coot shooting season.

278 Jerusalem Road – Home to one of the Hanlon brothers, whose summer acrobatic studio was located on Ripley Road, this house, originally an 1830's Cape Cod cottage, was enlarged by the Hanlons by pushing the first story high in air and adding another floor beneath.

Deep Run – A barn converted by architect Royal Barry Wills shortly after World War II for his summer home, this relatively modern house serves as a pleasant and fitting setting for the close of the tour of Cohasset's coast.

For information about these properties or other properties in Cohasset, call the Society at 781-383-1434 or stop by the Pratt Building at 106 S. Main St., from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Dinner with author

Buttonwood Books & Toys hosts "Dinner with the Author" on Tue. Jul. 31, 7 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza. Featured author is Min Jin Lee discussing "Free Food For Millionaires", the #1 Book Sense Pick for May 2007. This remarkable debut novel explores with amazing detail the many issues experienced by immigrants, particularly between generations. Her heroine, a smart, Ivy League educated, Korean immigrant, named Casey Han, leads her rich cast of characters. Casey is kicked out of the house after a fight with her old-world father. Her journey towards self- sufficiency is poignant, enlightening and thoroughly enjoyable. Min Jin Lee was born in South Korea. She went to Yale, and then attended Georgetown Law School. She has received numerous awards for her writing and her work has been featured on NPR's "Selected Shorts". Reservations & Tickets are required. A light dinner (wraps, wine/soft drink, dessert and coffee) will be served, and there is a nominal fee of $7. Please call Buttonwood at 1-781-383-2665 to reserve.

Boston Pops program to benefit South Shore Art Center

Multiple Tony Award nominee Marin Mazzie joins Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops in a performance featuring well-known hits from Broadway musicals and Hollywood movies. The concert will be held at 7 p.m., Saturday, July 28, at the South Shore Music Circus and all ticket proceeds will support the exhibitions and education programs of the South Shore Art Center. This is the fourth annual South Shore visit of the Boston Pops and conductor Keith Lockhart.

"There is nothing quite like hearing the Boston Pops at the Music Circus," says Sarah Hannan, executive director of the South Shore Art Center. "You literally feel as if you are in the orchestra, as no seat is more than 50-feet from the stage. Veteran Boston Pops audience-members rave about the intimacy of the Music Circus. Add to that the wonderful personality of Keith Lockhart, a Broadway superstar, and a program of blockbuster music and it's most definitely an evening to remember."

Concert tickets are $90.75 or $76.75 and are available at the South Shore Music Circus Box Office at 130 Sohier St., off Route 3A in Cohasset or through Ticketmaster at Ticketmaster.com. A limited number of premium concert packages are available through the South Shore Art Center, 781-383-2787 and include preferred seating and a post-concert reception with Keith Lockhart. The gala celebration is sponsored by Rockland Trust.

Keith Lockhart will lead the Boston Pops in a musical tribute to Broadway and Hollywood, Saturday July 28, at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset.

Norwell VNA to host golf tournament

Norwell Visiting Nurse Association will host the ninth annual Charity Golf Tournament on Monday, July 30. Registration is at 11 a.m., and shotgun start at noon. Rain date is Aug. 20. The tournament will take place at Cohasset Golf Club, 175 Lambert's Lane, Cohasset. Cost is $185 per golfer. Sponsorship opportunities for golfers and non-players are available.

To register, contact Jeanne Carey, Norwell Visiting Nurse Association, 91 Longwater Circle, Norwell, MA 02061; call 781-610-1422; email, jcarey@nvna.org; or visit the Web site at nvna.org/donations/donations-golfsponsorship.

This event, which takes place on a private Donald Ross-style course, is the Norwell VNA's biggest fundraiser of the year. Last year's event raised nearly $30,000 for the organization. All proceeds benefit the association in its ongoing efforts to provide low cost, quality healthcare to South Shore residents.

Dog obedience classes offered

Cohasset Recreation Department will offer dog obedience classes taught by Happy Dog Training School.

Beginner and advanced classes will take place Monday evenings on the Town Common in Cohasset. Fee is $110 for five classes, one hour per week program. Dog owners are required to have their dogs' shots/inoculations up to date.

To register, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109. Classes are limited in size and participants will be accepted on a first call, first enrolled basis. Sessions are started about every five weeks and callers will be enrolled in the next available session during the summer.

JULY 12- 20, 2007

Minnelli's star still shining

New show puts old friend in the spotlight

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

As a show business legend who almost always plays to sold-out houses, Liza Minnelli could easily ignore the many interview requests she receives in advance of a concert like the one she will give at the South Shore Music Circus on Thursday, July 19. But Minnelli did not become a legend by resting on her laurels, or by resting at all, it would seem. Even while vacationing in southern California after a just-concluded 21-city tour of South America, she is on the telephone and eager to talk.

And with good reason — Minnelli is bringing a brand new show to Cohasset, inspired by the late singer, dancer, pianist, and composer Kay Thompson, who also happened to be Minnelli's godmother.

"When Kay Thompson held me at my christening, I knew my life was going to be wonderful," says Minnelli. "Kay Thompson was a great, great woman and just the most brilliant performer. There were no body mics in those days and that meant that performers mostly stood still when they sang, but that wasn't going to work for Kay. She found a way to hang mics all over the stage so that she could keep moving while she sang. Her point was that you never stop moving and you never stop trying to entertain people."

Born in 1908, Thompson began her career in the 1930s as a singer and choral director for radio. By 1943, she had found her way to MGM Studios where she quickly became a vocal arranger for some of the biggest movie musicals of the day and a vocal coach to stars like Lena Horne, Frank Sinatra and Minnelli's own mother, Judy Garland. By the late 1940s, Thompson left MGM to create her own nightclub act with Andy Williams and his brothers whom she had discovered while working on the feature film "The Harvey Girls" in 1946. Billed simply as "Kay Thompson & The Williams Brothers," the act played a host of nightclubs nationwide, earning critical acclaim and a loyal fan base with their jazz-based harmonies and flamboyant performance style. And if that weren't enough, Thompson — who called the New York's Plaza Hotel home — was also the author of the best-selling "Eloise" series of children's books which feature the adventures of a precocious 6-year-old based on none other than the young Minnelli.

"My parents (Garland and film director Vincente Minnelli) took me to see Kay when I was about 2 years old and I have never forgotten it," recalls Minnelli, who has also recorded an album of Thompson's music. "She was a dear, dear friend of both of them and one of the greatest gifts I ever got in life was when they made Kay my godmother. She was sensational. She did all of those wonderful arrangements for MGM and then she did her incredible nightclub act, which was made up mostly of her original music. And, because I loved Kay so much, it is marvelous to have this chance to do this."

Liza Minnelli

Even for a veteran performer like the 61-year-old Minnelli, who never shies away from work, learning Thompson's songs was a challenge.

"The music is very difficult. You have to be right on pitch and you have to be thinking all the time. The greatest thing is that it still works and it is marvelous to do," the singer and actress says of the show, which is set to be filmed for Showtime in the coming months.

While preparing for her current tour, Minnelli — who has Emmy, Tony, Grammy and Golden Globe awards on her mantel, not to mention a Best Actress Oscar for her portrayal of Sally Bowles in the 1972 feature film "Cabaret" — made sure she was in good and familiar company.

"I'm working with Ron Lewis, one of the greatest choreographers in the world. He redefined dancing. Ron and I did 'The Act' on Broadway almost 30 years ago and we've worked together many times since. For this new show, he based the choreography on what works best with the music and, of course, for me. I trust him completely."

Trust is important to Minnelli, who always makes sure to surround herself with pros like her longtime music director Bill LaVorgna, a drummer who also played in her mother's band, and a certain dance instructor whom she also met through her parents.

"I go to a great jazz dance class for two hours every day. My teacher is a gentleman named Luigi who teaches what is called the Luigi jazz technique, which has really been invaluable to me. Luigi is 81 years old and danced in almost all of my parents' movies. He is like an uncle to me and he keeps me well."

In addition to paying tribute to Thompson — who lived with her in her New York penthouse in the final years before her death nine years ago at age 90 — Minnelli also plans to perform plenty of the songs she herself made famous.

"There won't be any opening act. I'm doing the whole damn show," she says with a hearty laugh. "I've got four guys with me who are terrific singers and dancers. We'll do two sets so there will be time for stuff of mine, too, including songs from 'Cabaret' and my other movies and, of course, from Broadway. I want people to come away feeling 'Holy Christ, I've been entertained.'"

Liza Minnelli will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on Thursday, July 19, and the Cape Cod Melody Tent Saturday, July 21. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org or melodytent.org and 617-931-2000.

Movie review

Daughter and mother, Constance and Ann (real-life daughter and mother Natasha Richardson and Vanessa Redgrave), share a happy memory.

Old stars twinkle in 'Evening'

Evening (B-)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

Dearly beloved, we are gathered at "Evening" to celebrate mothers and daughters, real and fictional, and a wedding.

Part "The Notebook," part "The Hours," "Evening" features Vanessa Redgrave and daughter Natasha Richardson and Meryl Streep and daughter Mamie Gummer in its cast. The film is a series of flashbacks to the past life of queenly matriarch Ann Grant Lord (Redgrave) as she lay dying in her bed.

The film will undoubtedly resonate with baby boomers who have dealt with the illnesses and deaths of parents.

Much of the action in the flashbacks involves a flurry of activity surrounding the wedding of the patrician Lila Wittenborn (Gummer) to someone who doesn't count very much in the action in and around a gorgeous home on the Newport, R.I. coast. The young Ann (Claire Danes, who in no way resembles Redgrave) arrives from bohemian Greenwich Village to serve as maid of honor. Ann is introduced to young physician Harris Arden (Patrick Wilson). Yes, all the characters in "Evening" have names out of a social register.

Ann also babysits Lila's annoying brother Buddy (Hugh Dancy), a sodden runt who is the family embarrassment and a wannabe writer, although he hasn't written anything because he is too intimidated by the great authors of the world.

Further caveats: The film is based on a 1998 novel by Susan Minot that would have had Oprah's Book Club foaming at the mouth in ecstasy. It was adapted to the screen by Minot and novelist Michael Cunningham ("The Hours") and suggests a "Cries and Whispers" spread in Architectural Digest.

In one scene, Harris names a star after Ann. A shot of Danes reclining in a flowing white chemise on a sailboat at sunset looks like an ad campaign for a new fragrance called "Thin."

In the present, Ann's grown daughters Constance (Richardson) and Nina (Toni Collette) share duties and tangle a bit. Nina is pregnant, but not sure she wants to have a child with her current flame, a musician named Luc (Ebon Moss-Bachrach).

Ninety minutes into "Evening," Streep finally appears, dripping pearls, as the older Lila and gives the film a huge lift. She climbs into bed with her dying friend to giggle and reminisce. Streep and Redgrave act rings around the kids. Also excellent is Eileen Atkins as Ann's Irish night nurse.

"Evening" was directed by Lajos Koltai, a Budapest-born cinematographer whose previous directing credit was the 2005 Holocaust drama "Fateless." If you get bored by the characters in his new film, as I did, you can admire the pretty pictures.

Rated PG-13. "Evening" contains sexually suggestive scenes.

That's why they call it the blues

Festival plays Memorial Hall July14

By Emily Wilcox
EWILCOX@CNC.COM

PLYMOUTH – It was an outgrowth of agony, a eulogy to hopes that got smashed to smithereens, a tribute to tribulation. African Americans gave birth to it, nurtured it and raised it from the dust of poverty and oppression. When folks spoke of having a fit of the "blue devils" when they felt pangs of despair, it was a done deal. They would call this the blues.

The blues became the signature song of the downtrodden. Its universal pathos pulled suits, hard hats, aprons and heels to its edges, everyone straining to hear this music that transformed pain into something smoky and cool, rough around the edges and powerful as a typhoon.

At 7:30 p.m., Saturday, July 14, Loretta Laroche Productions will present the First Annual Blues Festival at Plymouth's Memorial Hall. This four-hour power play will include blues greats from the past and present, including James Montgomery Bluesband, Diane Blue, Professor Harp, the Chris Fitz Band, Luther Guitar Jr. Johnson, music prodigy Grace Kelly and Plymouth's own Tall Richard.

Tickets are $25 for general admission and $50 for Gold Circle seating, and are available at the Plymouth Hall box office at 50 Court St., online at www.plymouthhall.com, or by calling 508-747-1340. Tickets are also available at all Strawberries and FYE locations.

"The whole idea is to give the community different styles of music," Loretta Laroche Productions President Erik Christensen said. "Five years ago, we brought in Peter Wolf and it was a smashing success. We've had Bo Diddley years back. I like the blues. I really wanted old school and new school to meet."

Chris Fitz Band is one of several blues bands that will tear up the stage at Memorial Hall, Saturday, July 14.

James Montgomery of James Montgomery Blues Band will deliver the blues next Saturday at Memorial Hall.

Blues greats, Luther Guitar Jr. Johnson, Professor harp and James Montgomery need no introduction.

But for the uninitiated, Johnson is an animal on guitar, drawing off his Mississippi roots that stretch all the way to Chicago. Weaned on Southern blues in the 1940s, he played with Magic Sam in the 1960s, and was a valued member of the Muddy Water's band from 1972 to 1980. Johnson has appeared on several Nighthawks albums, and continues to rip it up on stage, whipping crowds into frenzy.

Montgomery empowers the microphone with his mind-blowing harp and singing. His tireless dedication to the needy makes him lovable and accessible to boot; he is known for hosting benefit concerts that have raised thousands upon thousands of dollars for wonderful causes. You name the artist, Montgomery has likely trained or played with him or her, from Bonnie Raitte to John Lee Hooker, to Gregg Allman and Kid Rock.

Professor Harp started out as a rock drummer in the '60s before he witnessed George Allen Harmonica Smith's performance during a Boston blues revival. That was all it took for Harp to hang up his sticks in favor of the harmonica. Harp is known for his no-frills, Texas-style approach, enhanced by a Leslie speaker sound system that gives his sound a Hammond organ timbre. In short, he's an innovator.

Christensen noted that Diane Blue is a former computer geek who fled the techie world to become a blues singer and harpist. At 5-feet-nothing, Blue may seem diminutive, but her giant voice commands the stage. She plays harmonica like she was born on the bayou.

Chris Fitz is another newcomer whose showmanship comes alive through his amazing guitar licks and his vocals. In the 1990s, Fitz was known for his work with the band, Vykki Vox and the Soul Searchers, before he set out on his own in the Chris Fitz Band. That was 12 years ago, and today Fitz is known for his signature explosive blues. His band has toured Europe, won multiple awards and sold 10,000 copies of its studio albums.

Tall Richard is the likable genius behind the harmonica who has been keeping local music alive through an open mic jam at Kiskadee Coffee shop in downtown Plymouth every week. Richard is famous for his band, Tall Richard and the Nightowls, his Hawaiian shirts, zandanas, and his amazing talent as a harpist. He may make it look easy, but he trained for years with Muddy Waters harmonica player Jerry Portnoy. To say Richard is a seasoned musician is a ridiculous understatement. His talent is as tall as he is.

"I saw him last year," Christensen said. "I can't believe his singing. It's old school blues."

The Blues Festival is already creating quite a buzz. Christensen said he's received such a positive response, he plans to hold a bluesfest every year. WBOS DJ Holly Harris will host Saturday's show.

"We're going to help the blues," Christensen added. "There's an actual foundation that helps the artists. We're giving $10 from every ticket to that cause."

Music Unlimited has also donated a guitar to the cause.

Police and the MBTA are warning people to stay off the train tracks. MBTA Transit Police and local police are pledging to arrest anyone who violates this directive.

No trespassing on tracks

Test runs are starting up

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Stay off the tracks!

Anyone caught walking on railroad property, including the train tracks, for any reason whatsoever is risking not only his or her safety but also arrest.

Test train runs (the first took place on May 19) were scheduled to start again as early as this week, along with signal light and guardrail testing to ensure the devices meet safety standards. Test trains may operate at any time, day or evening, seven days a week, and will not operate on a set schedule. This means that adults, children and pets should stay off and away from the tracks at all times and that vehicles should not stop on the tracks under any circumstances.

In an effort to prevent deaths or serious injuries along the 18-mile railway traversing from Scituate to Braintree and on to South Station, MBTA Transit Police and local police are pledging to arrest anyone who violates this directive.

"Nobody wants to see anybody get killed or injured," said Tom Carroll, community liaison for Greenbush contractor Cashman Balfour Beatty during a recent press conference to which all five towns affected by Greenbush rail service were invited. "We need to get the word out."

Now, that the Greenbush line is an active railway, the Cohasset Police Department, under the leadership of Chief James Hussey, has adopted a "no tolerance" policy when it comes to rail safety. This means that anyone caught on the tracks (or inside the fences or the tunnel) will be arrested for trespassing, which comes with a $100 fine under state law.

"We will have a zero tolerance policy and will seek criminal complaints against anyone trespassing," Hussey

Restaurant, apartments are planned

Cohasset Hardware building variance finally approved

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's difficult to imagine the village without the iconic Cohasset Hardware building. Since the 1920s the Cohasset Hardware sign has greeted visitors and residents as they drive down North Main Street. But, in the coming months Cohasset should be on the lookout for change at 40 South Main St.

"This has been our home for 50 years and we're appreciative of the board's consideration."
— Jim Watson, owner

After several bumps in the road, the Zoning Board of Appeals at last granted Jim and Tina Watson, owners of the building, the variance needed for them to move forward with their proposed renovation for the building.

The village building will remain as commercial space on the first floor and the second and third floors will be transformed into four one-bedroom apartments split between the floors.

Stella, a South End restaurant, has expressed interest in the first floor of the building, said Tina Watson. The owner of Stella came to the Watsons about opening a Cohasset branch. Stella's website states it offers "affordable and approachable cuisine in a chic

Lockhart enjoys 'intimate' Music Circus setting

Art Center ready to Pops!

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Oscar Tony and Keith are coming to Cohasset.

This year, Boston Pops conductor Keith Lockhart will lead the orchestra in rousing renditions of Oscar and Tony winning music. For the fourth year running, the renowned orchestra is coming the South Shore Music Circus as a fundraiser for the South Shore Arts Center on Saturday, July 28.

For the Pops, the Music Circus setting is a far cry from their typical venues — large theatres and outdoor amphitheatres — making it a special experience.

"It is the only time the Pops, at least in my time, has played in a theatre in the round," says Lockhart, "it's not a structure meant for an orchestral performance."

But that doesn't stop the Pops from putting on an extraordinary show; in fact it may even enhance it. Lockhart describes the setting as "intimate" for both the musicians and the audience members.

"You can feel the audience sharing in the performance," says Lockhart. No seat under the tent is more than 50 feet from the stage; it is the closest audience members can get to the orchestra anywhere.

"It's the most exciting atmosphere I have ever experienced with Lockhart and the Pops," says Frank Neer, President of the Board of Directors for the SSAC who also serves on the Board of Directors for the South Shore Playhouse Associates that owns and operates the Music Circus and Cape Cod Melody Tent, "you feel like you are in the orchestra."

The first year the Pops came to Cohasset, Lockhart and the orchestra were "a little apprehensive" about playing both in close quarters and in such a small theatre. The apprehension soon faded and now each year they look forward to the unique musical experience the Music Circus offers.

This year's show is drawn from the Pops upcoming CD release featuring the stage and screen classics; it will feature the vocal talents of Broadway star Marin Mazzie.

"The program dictated the type of performer we needed.

Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, shown here in July 2005, will return to the Music Circus for the fourth consecutive summer July 28. Audiences can view them in a musical tribute to Broadway and Hollywood as multiple Tony award winner Marin Mazzie

She's a major league diva star and the audience loves her," says Lockhart. Mazzie is a multi-Tony award nominee who is currently starring in "Spamalot" on Broadway.

One of the Music Circus's distinctive qualities is the round stage. Lockhart laments the fact his orchestra is so large it spills out beyond the country portion of the stage making rotation impossible. The lack of rotation forces him to have

Cable committee doubles in size

All three were appointed to the board in a unanimous motion and will join its current members.

The Cable Advisory Committee doubled in size in one fell swoop at the Selectmen's meeting last week. A few weeks ago, the town requested interested citizens to come forward. Bob Pattison, Jr., Gregory Wojcieszak, and James Morrison, Jr. sent a letters of interest and interviewed with the Board of Selectmen. All three were appointed to the board in a unanimous motion and will join its current members.

The charge of the Cable Advisory Committee is to advise the Selectmen on matters related to cable, from license transfer, merger, assignment or original issuance. The committee serves as a liaison between cable customers and the cable company on issues relating to quality of service, among other things. The Committee is designed to have a minimum of five members and a maximum of seven members.

Youths linked to break-ins

By Ryan Bray
RBRAY@CNC.COM

After months of investigating a string of break-ins, three juveniles from Cohasset will be charged in connection with several of the robberies in Scituate and one in Cohasset.

Cohasset Police Chief James Hussey said the three juveniles will be charged with malicious destruction of property for setting fire to an outdoor toilet, while only two will be charged with burglary for a late night break in on Beechwood Street last month.

Sgt. Det. Greg Lennon said the malicious destruction charges stemmed from a June 20 incident where an outdoor toilet at the Beechwood Street ball field was destroyed and burnt to the ground. The burglary charge stemmed from a later incident in which a Beechwood Street home was the site of a late night-break in.

Lennon said a laptop computer was confiscated from a home on Church Street in connection with the Beechwood Street burglary. He said Cohasset Police are still investigating the robbery.

"We're making additional efforts to uncover more stolen property," he said.

Lt. Detective Mike Stewart of the Scituate Police Department said Scituate Police will also charge two of the juveniles, ages 14 and 15, with multiple counts of burglary stemming from several break-ins in Scituate's West End, while the other 14-year-old will face one burglary charge. Each count carries a maximum 20-year prison sentence, Stewart said.

Two of the juveniles were arrested for an attempted breaking and entering of a motor vehicle on Cherry Lane in Scituate on July 7. In that incident, a resident allegedly witnessed the youths in the act of breaking into his car. The suspects fled to a home about a half-mile away on Church Street in Cohasset, where they were later tracked down with the help of the department's K-9 unit.

Stewart said after further investigation, police found that the two juveniles had also broken into a house on nearby Indian Winds Drive before moving to Cherry Lane.

"It was a lot of risk for very little reward."

— Scituate Police Lt. Detective Mike Stewart

"We found it was the same kids on the same night," Stewart said.

On July 11, police executed a search warrant on the house on Church Street, where Stewart said police uncovered a number of items allegedly stolen in different robberies over the past three months. Among the items recovered by police included customized knives allegedly stolen from a vehicle across the street from the attempted Cherry Lane break-in and a laptop computer linked to the Beechwood Street robbery in Cohasset. Police also recovered a couple hundred dollars in cash.

"It was a lot of risk for very little reward," Stewart said.

Stewart said the three juveniles are cooperating with police and that officers are still recovering stolen materials linked to the robberies. He said the juveniles are lucky not to have encountered other potential consequences commonly associated with late night break-ins, namely run-ins with defensive homeowners.

"It's a very dangerous thing entering people's homes at night, because anything can happen," he said. "People are very protective of their homes and their property."

Over the past three to four months, police have been investigating a series of robberies in Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Hingham. While the Beechwood Street break-in has been the only reported burglary in Cohasset, Scituate Police have responded to a series of reports from residents in the West End regarding late night break-ins on Summer Street and neighboring areas. In each instance, items such as wallets, cash and small electronic items like iPods sitting in plain view were taken. Stewart said all of the break-ins occurred between the hours of midnight and 5 a.m. and that suspects allegedly entered the houses through unlocked front doors and windows.

Being alert to inquisitive callers

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A walk-in to the police station last week reported receiving a strange phone call from someone with a "foreign voice" asking if the house was for sale, police said. Although, police have not had any reports of similar incidents, Chief James Hussey urges residents to contact police if a stranger starts asking personal questions over the phone.

He explained that sometimes a caller will chat with someone for a while to build a rapport and then try to get his or her personal information that could be used in a potential fraud situation. "Anytime you get a call from someone you are not familiar with who starts asking questions you are not interested in answering it could be cause for alarm," Hussey said.

"Anytime you get a call from someone you are not familiar with who starts asking questions you are not interested in answering it could be cause for alarm."

— Police Chief James Hussey

On the tracks

Two boys found walking on the railroad tracks last week were given a verbal no-trespassing warning, Chief Hussey said. He explained, however, that going forward police would seek fines and criminal complaints against anyone trespassing along or on the tracks. (See story, page one). Hussey said police would be holding more outreach programs with the community to alert citizens to the danger of walking along the right-of-way. He said the MBTA is in the process of posting no-trespassing signs.

Medical issue

A woman who was later discovered to have a medical issue nearly hit a sheriff conducting a traffic detail on Forest Avenue last week. Chief Hussey said the officer reported that the female operator came so close that she nearly hit him. Officers responded and pulled her over; at first they thought she was intoxicated. She was also evaluated by medics and it was determined she had an equilibrium problem, said police, who confirmed there were no alcohol or drugs involved. The officers escorted her to her house, Hussey said. The incident occurred at about 2:10 p.m. on Tuesday (July 10).

Minors with beer

Police have been conducting regular patrols in Wheelwright Park because of youth complaints in the area over the past four to six weeks. On July 12 at about 8:15 p.m. officers on bicycle patrol were riding through the park and came across two minors with beer. Chief Hussey said it appeared the officers found them at the beginning of the teens' evening as they had only one open container of beer with them. The rest of the beer was in a car which belonged to one of the teens.

Hussey said two 19-year-olds would be summonsed to court on the charge of being minors in possession of alcohol. One of the mothers took the boys home that night and the car remained locked up at the park.

Window broken

Police have identified some "people of interest" and continue to investigate an incident of vandalism at Tedeschi's in the village involving a rock that was thrown through a glass panel in the door. The incident occurred at about 12:30 a.m. on Friday (July 13). There was some work being done overnight at the convenience store and the video cameras were shut down. Police have recovered the rock and there was also some blood on the window. "We are looking at some young men that were seen in the area during that timeframe," Chief Hussey said. He explained police found the youths of interest and delivered one of them to a parent.

Purse stolen

A woman's purse that was reported stolen from an unlocked car parked on South Main Street just outside the Village area at about 9 a.m. on Friday (July 13) was later found in the vicinity of St. Anthony's, police said. Everything inside the purse, including credit cards was recovered except for cash and a check made out to the victim. Police believe the purse was taken after midnight and have collected some evidence. "We are going to see if some individuals that we know were in the area that night might somehow have been involved," Chief Hussey said.

Raccoons

Police created a way for a family of raccoons in a dumpster by Leo's Exxon last week to climb out. The officers had responded to a call about raccoons being stuck inside.

Village MVA

A motorist was cited for making an improper left-hand turn and for failure to use care while backing up following an accident in Cohasset Village at about 4 p.m. on Friday (July 13). Police said a 2000 Dodge was heading northbound on South Main Street approaching the area of Elm Street when a 2003 Toyota, traveling southbound, made an improper left-hand turn into one of the angled spaces by Cohasset Hardware. When the driver of the Toyota tried to back up to straighten out, the Toyota hit the Dodge.

Parking overflow

Several cars that were parking at the library because the Music Circus lot was full parked in a haphazard fashion, blocking fire lanes last Friday (July 13).

Chief Hussey explained the Music Circus has an agreement with the library to use the lot for overflow parking. But apparently on this night, the cars arrived before the attendant that controls the parking and parked in a disorganized fashion around the library. Police called the fire department, which found that emergency vehicles could still squeeze by if necessary. The violators were ticketed, police said.

Blocked hydrant

A car was tagged for blocking a fire hydrant in front of the Red Lion Inn last week. Police made an effort to find the owner of the vehicle so it did not have to be towed from the scene, police said. Chief Hussey said motorists should not block hydrants or fire lanes because it is a safety issue.

"Even if you think it will be just for 30 seconds, sometimes that time drags on," he said. "It is not that hard to find a legal spot and walking the extra 50 yards is healthy for all of us."

Hit & run

A motorist reported that she was backing out of a parking space in Shaw's Plaza when someone hit her car and took off. The incident was reported at about 4:40 p.m. on Wednesday (July11). The victim was able to provide a description of the other car including plate number. The driver will be cited with leaving the scene after property damage.

Trespassing on tracks will not be tolerated said. "We want to make sure people realize the seriousness and danger on the tracks."

Children and adults are also warned to never run across the tracks when they see a train coming, even if it appears to be a great distance away, and never to place objects on the tracks. Objects that are struck with such force will shatter, and the debris could cause personal injury or even derail a train. Likewise, objects should never be thrown at a train because they could hurt or distract the engineer or come back at the thrower at the speed at which the train is traveling.

All five towns served by the Greenbush line — Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Weymouth, and Braintree — have requested that the entire line be declared a "quiet zone." This means that whistles won't be sounded except in an emergency. The final step in the process, gaining Federal Railroad Administration approval, is in the works. "It is a no-whistle zone, and it is very important for people to realize why they should stay off the tracks and not walk on the right-of-way," Carroll said.

Train whistles are ordinarily blown when approaching a grade crossing; but due to the many grade crossings within a short distance along the Greenbush line, a waiver is being sought to provide relief from incessant whistle blowing.

Local police in all five communities are working with the MBTA to educate residents and others passing through these communities to keep off the tracks and to enforce the no trespassing law both during the trial runs and once commuter rail service is up and running.

"We will have a zero tolerance policy and will seek criminal complaints against anyone trespassing."
— Police Chief James Hussey

"We are looking to build on our partnership with the law enforcement agencies in each town to keep people from trespassing," Transit Police Lt. Joseph O'Connor said at the press conference. "We have heard from construction workers that they have seen people riding their bikes along the right-of-way and people walking their dogs on the tracks [in a number of areas]. This is a violation of the law, and the law will be enforced. Our concerted goal is to save lives and to educate people about the law."

Transit police and local police departments are relying on residents to report people who trespass on the Greenbush line in an effort to keep everyone safe.

O'Connor said that residents should not underestimate the dangers posed by commuter rail. "If people are out on the tracks and they have a headset on or are listening to an I-Pod, they won't hear the train coming," he said.

Due to the dangers posed by rail restoration, the National Transportation Safety Bureau requires communities offering rail service to present the "Operation Lifesaver" train safety program to both children and adults. The program's motto is: "Don't be fooled. Always expect a train. Stay off. Stay away. Stay alive." The program emphasizes the importance of obeying signal lights at railroad street crossings to avoid being struck by a train and not walking on railway beds.

O'Connor urged parents to discuss train safety with their children to keep them from being seriously hurt or killed. "They need to sit down with their children and talk with them, like they would if they were talking about the dangers of drugs and alcohol," he said.

Operation Lifesaver is a nationwide non-profit public awareness program that delivers a safety message to young people, business leaders, driving schoolteachers, professional truck drivers, and school bus drivers. The program teaches grade crossing safety. Due to an increase in the number of people killed and injured on railroad right-of-ways, Operation Lifesaver is now working to educate the public about pedestrian safety.

One of the most sobering facts is that a commuter rail train traveling at 55 mph takes a mile to come to a complete stop, as compared with 200 feet for a car moving at the same speed.

It's been nearly 50 years since the last commuter train passed through Cohasset, so Greenbush restoration will take some getting used to. One of the most graphic examples of the serious dangers posed by the restoration of rail service is that a train colliding with a car would squash it like a car driving over a soda can.

Trains have the right of way, and they can come at any time. The trains are also wider than they appear, with a three-foot hangover on both sides of the tracks.

The T will offer 12 round trips on the Greenbush line between Scituate and South Station on weekdays, excluding holidays. The trains will run between 5:45 a.m. and 11 p.m. A one-way trip from Scituate to South Station is expected to take 59 minutes.

Weymouth News staff writer Ed Baker and Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford also contributed to this report.

More test trains are coming

The public is urged to watch out for multiple trains on tracks in Hingham, Braintree, Cohasset, Weymouth, and Scituate effective immediately.

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority and its commuter rail service provider, Massachusetts Bay Commuter Railroad Company, announced recently that trains will start riding on the rails of the restored Greenbush line every day beginning as early as this week. The targeted start date for Greenbush commuter rail service is Sept. 29.

As a result of this activity, the MBTA and MBCR urge residents in Hingham, Braintree, Weymouth, Scituate, and Cohasset to be alert at all times to the potential presence of trains on the tracks at grade crossings and the potential hazard to trespassers who might live near or walk along the rail right-of-way.

"We urge residents in Greenbush communities to remember that even when trains are not on the tracks, a high level of attentiveness is necessary because commuter trains run quieter and faster than many people realize," said MBCR General Manager James F. O'Leary. "In addition, residents must recognize that the warning provided by flashing lights and ringing bells at grade crossings should be obeyed at all times."

The MBTA and MBCR recently launched an outreach and education program that will teach residents about safety around the rails. This effort is targeted toward school children, business associations, and senior citizen groups and will continue throughout the summer and fall months.

Both the MBTA and MBCR are committed to providing resources to all of the Greenbush communities that will ensure public safety.

"Even though [regular] service on the line will not begin until this Fall, the commuter line tracks and [test] trains should be taken as seriously, in the safety perspective, as regular running trains," said Julianne Klimetz on behalf of MBCR and the MBTA.

MBCR is in partnership with Veolia Transportation, one of Europe's largest passenger transportation companies; Bombardier Transportation, the world's leader in the manufacture and maintenance of passenger rail vehicles; and Alternate Concepts, a Boston-based transportation operations and consulting firm with expertise in the design, operation and maintenance of rail transit systems.

MBCR operates and maintains the fifth largest commuter rail network in the United States under a contract with the MBTA. MBCR provides service to 40 million passengers a year in nearly 80 cities and towns in Massachusetts, as well as in Providence, RI.

Rep. Garrett Bradley shares budget information

Bradley is currently lobbying for a bill on retired teachers' health insurance that he hopes will help the bottom line.

State Representative Garrett Bradley stopped in at the School Committee meeting recently to talk about the upcoming fiscal year's budget. Although the State House is still finalizing the numbers, Bradley said Cohasset's funding would be unlikely to change drastically.

"The budget reported as early as next week, local aid are the numbers as we move forward," said Bradley.

Cohasset received a 9.2 percent increase in their Chapter 70 funding for a total of $1,696,971. Lottery aid has dropped off a bit in the past year, said Bradley. Even still, Cohasset will see a 1.3 percent increase over last year's allotment, or $474,221. Additional assistance totaling $166,099 was level funded.

"We know local aid hasn't been where you want," but he is working to find ancillary items to help fund towns and schools. Bradley is currently lobbying for a bill on retired teachers' health insurance that he hopes will help the bottom line.

Due to early retirements there has been a large increase in teachers' health insurance assessments that are billed back to the towns. For example, Cohasset allows teachers upon retirement to go into the state insurance pool until 65, when they are Medicare eligible. Cohasset has a 70/30 split for teachers' health insurance, meaning the town pays 70 percent of the cost with the teacher picking up 30 percent. But when the teacher retires, he or she goes into the state system where the split is 90/10. The town, in this case Cohasset, has to pick up the additional 20 percent that shows up as an annual assessment of $750,000.

Retired teachers currently in the state system would be grandfathered and new retirees would remain under their contracted split. Over a period of years, Bradley said, the assessment will be reduced to zero thereby increasing the community's local aid.

Films on the farm

Documentaries highlight 'growing' problems

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Holly Hill Farms is re-inventing the drive-in movie. For two more nights this summer, Holly Hill will transform their red Tomato Barn into a movie screen, light their backyard with citronella candles, and in the waning sun of a summer day show a documentary about agriculture in America.

"It's an interesting way to bring people to the farm during the summer," says farm manager and film series organizer, Ben Wolbach, "we want people to see the farm as a destination during the summer."

This is the first year the Friends of Holly Hill farm has organized the "Films on the Farm" series.

"It's a great way to get the word out about problems in the farming industry," says Wolbach, "a film says a lot quickly and does most of the work for you."

Holly Hill Farm at 236 Jerusalem Road is an organic farm. It is a for-profit business dedicated to growing high quality organic vegetables to local businesses. Holly Hill grows vegetables on about four acres of land in the heart of Cohasset. The Friends of the Holly Hill Farm is a non-profit organization devoted to protecting open space and running educational programs using the resources of Holly Hill Farm.

"The two organizations complement each other," says Wolbach, each of the educational programs offered for kids and adults teach about farming and how people can grow organic vegetables in their own garden.

The film series was born out of Wolbach's passion for film. Combining his film interest with his passion for farming seemed a natural fit, he says. His brother works in the film industry and bringing agriculturally minded films to the farm setting is a way to raise awareness of the Holly Hill organic farm and the greater farming industry, says Wolbach.

Wolbach spent time looking at film showings at recent environmental film festivals, then narrowing the options to those dealing with agriculture. He chose films that personalized the farm industry, but portrayed some of the growing problems cropping up American agriculture.

The first night of the film series on June 27 more than 20 people attended to view "The Future of Food," a film exploring the truth behind the unlabeled, patented, genetically engineered foods filling American's grocery store shelves.

Next Wednesday, July 25, "King Corn," will be shown on the Holly Hill barn. The movie follows the interesting tale of two college friends who decide post-graduation to grow an acre of corn in Iowa, and then follow their pile of corn into the food system. They use genetically modified seeds, nitrogen fertilizers and powerful herbicides to grow their grain. What they find raises questions about how we eat — and how we farm, "it's a really fun window into a big issue," says Wolbach.

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

Farm managers Hannah Hobbs, left, and Ben Wolbach, right, hold a movie poster for "King Corn" while sitting with a number of products that have corn in it. The movie will be played at 8 p.m., July 25 at Holly Hill Farms. The products are gasoline with ethanol, corn tortilla chips, corn flour, ketchup with high fructose corn syrup, and natural feed grain used for chickens. Corn can also be found in feed grain for cows and pigs. It can also be found in dog food, cat food, cereal, corn oil, cheap beer, and many processed foods such as cookies, soda and fruit juice.

"Right now, there is a lot of focus on the merits of eating local [and organic] food and people are excited about it. It's a great opportunity for people to see more about of it at the farm."

-Ben Wolbach, farm manager

Like the drive-in movies of old, a double feature will be shown on the night of Wednesday, August 22. Two shorter films will be shown. "Beyond Organic: The Vision of Fairview Gardens" follows the story of a Southern California farm's long battle to survive in rapid suburban development.

"I really wanted to show this movie because here we are [Holly Hill Farms] farming in the suburb of Cohasset," says Wolbach.

"My Father's Garden," the second half of the double feature, tells the story of two innovators — Herbert Smith, a champion of the 1950's "miracle sprays" and the birth of conventional chemical farming methods and Fred Kirschenmann, the organic farmer of today. The documentary is directed by Smith's daughter and shows the devastating health effects the chemical sprays has had on farmers.

"Right now, there is a lot of focus on the merits of eating local [and organic] food and people are excited about it," says Wolbach, "it's a great opportunity for people to see more about of it at the farm."

"There's a disassociation within our culture between food and farming," says educational director, Jon Belber, "we try to teach where food comes from." The films give Holly Hill Farm a context in the bigger picture and movement of sustainable living, Belber says.

Because of the complexity of the films, children may not fully appreciate the movies. Wolbach hopes to put together a separate film series for children in the future of more age-appropriate films.

However, "Films on the Farm" has elements to bring out the kid in each of us. Wolbach has arranged for the Nona's Ice Cream truck to visit Holly Hill before the film begins. Attendees are invited to come early with a picnic dinner and bring lawn chairs or a blanket to optimize comfort. Long sleeves and pants may make the viewing more comfortable, advised Wolbach.

The films showings begin at 8p.m. and end "when the fireflies come out," says Wolbach.

"Films on the Farm" will be held on Wednesday, July 25 and August 22 (double feature). Holly Hill Farms is located at 236 Jerusalem Road. For more information call 781-383-1455.

SUMMER FUN

Hello Cohasset. We still have more of a summer to keep it growing and that is good enough for me. We have a lot of plays and shows to see so make sure this weekend to come and join the shows. August has a number of classes and shows that can be signed up for as some of the other programs slow down so always make sure to see it all.

HOME AGAIN

A huge Welcome Home goes out to Miss Colby Callahan who arrived home on July 19th from her 15-day delegation in Australia as a People to People Student Ambassador . She had an incredible journey that so many cannot wait to hear about! Every time her family spoke with her, she was so excited and thrilled. She kept thanking her mom and dad over and over for the opportunity to take part in this wonderful program. Colby's Mom (Kim) and Dad (Charlie) and her little brother Seth are so happy that she is home and are going to enjoy the rest of the summer as she shares all her stories with them. Cohasset welcomes you home as well Colby, we are all very proud of you!

WILDCATS!

Ok Cohasset, this is the weekend that the Wildcats have arrived and will be performing at the Cohasset Middle High School auditorium. That's right, "Disney's High School Musical" is coming to town through the Cohasset Dramatic Club in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department. The dates are July 20th at 10 a.m. and 7:30 pm, July 21 at 7:30 p.m. and July 22 at 2 p.m. .Tickets are $10 and may be purchased in advance at Buttonwood Books, Front Street Books in Scituate or by calling 617-697-2115. You may also purchase tickets at the door.

Grab family and friends and come to one musical and wonderful event that everyone will enjoy! The cast of this show has been working so hard and the end result will be fun, music-filled and a treat for all to enjoy. Come dressed in the Wildcat colors of red and white to really get into the groove!

FITNESS PROGRAM

Mr. Kevin Dykas, our very popular gym teacher at the Osgood School is holding a three-day fitness program at the Deer Hill School gym/field on Aug. 13,14 and 15th through the Cohasset Recreation Department/One Creative Place. Spaces are still available for this for ages 4-9 and you may register for 1,2 or all 3 days by going to the Recreation Department at Town Hall, calling 781-383-4109 or 781-383-2211 or by going to www.onecreativeplace.net.

CURRY NEWS

Curry College in Milton announced that the following Cohasset residents received degrees on May 20 and we want to recognize them. Congratulations to Margariata Barry, who received a Master of Education degree; Alexis Devine, Bachelor of Arts; Helen Pitts, also a Bachelor of Arts degree; and Leigh-Anne Walsh with aBachelor of Arts as well. Best of luck to all!

Curry College also released the College Dean's List for the Spring 2007 term and Cohasset residents Brian Paul Denoncourt, Alexis Christina Devine and Samuel McGrath Kusek were named to the list. Super work to all three of you in this success.

ON STAGE

Cohasset resident Sam Game will perform in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" and "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" as part of Lyric First Stage 2007, a teen intensive theater program at The Lyric Stage Company of Boston from Aug. 8-12. The Lyric Stage Company of Boston is located at 140 Clarendon St. in Boston's Copley Square and tickets are $8 for students and $12 for adults. For more information or to order tickets call 617-585-5678 or log on to their website at www.lyric-stage.com

HONK!

Tickets are now on sale for The Family Performing Arts and Kidspot's production of the musical HONK! Based on Hans Christian Andersen's "The Ugly Duckling," HONK! is an international award-winning comic musical. Performances are at the air-conditioned Duxbury Performing Arts Center, Alden Street, Duxbury, July 27th and 28th at 7:30pm. Tickets may be purchased at the door. For information, please call 781-826-8550. Tickets are $12 for adults and $10 for students and seniors. This cast consists of 80 children ages 6-14 from nine towns across the South Shore and Cohasset resident Rebecca Fredey is one of those children.

TENNIS PARTNERS

Two of the A Division semifinalists Molly Adams and Brian Hill are all smiles before their match against tournament winners Rob Silva and Lisa Thule in the Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament over the weekend. Proceeds from this year's CBTT benefit the newly created Suicide Prevention Program at Children's Hospital. For more photos, see page 28.

MARITIME ACADEMY

Congratulations go out to Cadet 1st Class Alexander Schmidt who graduated from Massachusetts Maritime Academy on Saturday, June 16, 2007 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Marine Safety & Environmental Protection.

LIBRARY POLICY

An important policy change is being reported from the Cohasset Paul Pratt Memorial Library! Due to the overwhelming support of the free Tuesday evening family programs and to maintain a safe environment, the library is going to have to limit the number of participants to 60 as in accordance with the Massachusetts State Building Code, Section 106.5. Free tickets for each performance will be available at the Circulation Desk beginning the Wednesday before the performance. This will be on a first come, first served basis.

PRESIDENT'S LIST

Great job to Cohasset resident Ian Charles Kidder, who was named to Plymouth State University's President's List for the spring semester of the 2006-2007 academic year. Congratulations!

UVM HONORS

Here are some more Cohasset residents who were recognized at the University of Vermont for achieving dean's list for the spring, 2007 semester. Alexander Berg, who is majoring in Business Administration; Matthew Fithian, who is majoring in biology; and Monica Picard, who is majoring in Social Work, all accomplished this recognition. Congratulations.

DEAN'S LIST

William Prendergast of Cohasset was named to the dean's list at the University of New Haven for the 2007 spring semester. Full time undergraduate students must have a 3.50 or better cumulative grade point average for the semester to be eligible for the dean's list.

MERRIMACK

Danielle Hinman of Cohasset received a bachelor of arts degree from Merrimack College at the 57th commencement exercises on Sunday, May 20.

BENTLEY COLLEGE

The following students from Cohasset were named to the dean's list at Bentley College, where they achieved outstanding academic achievement in the 2007 spring semester.

Courtney Hurley, a junior majoring in undecided business.

BC HIGH HONORS

HIGH HONORS: Thomas J. Chase, Class of 2008; Alan T. Kershaw, Class of 2008; Eric Peter Vanderpool, Class of 2009; Keegan Robert Flynn, Class of 2010; Paul Oliver Forrer, Class of 2010; David M. A rare gem: Cohasset Jewelers celebrates 25 years

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

On July 1, 1982 Cohasset Jewelers opened its doors for business and now, a quarter-century later, the family-owned business is still going strong. The Cirone family has grown the business over the last 25 years into a store South Shore residents turn to when looking for a special piece of jewelry.

"I love Cohasset and the community on the South Shore."
— Mark Cirone, Cohasset Jewelers

Don and Mark Cirone of Cohasset Jewelers show a photo taken 24 years ago that includes their parents Jerry and Netta Cirone and the then president of the South Shore Art Center.

Owner Mark Cirone has developed a philosophy to provide "surprisingly affordable, quality jewelry." He has even has the phrase trademark showing his dedication to its meaning.

"I love Cohasset and the community on the South Shore," says Cirone who grew up in Hingham, works in Cohasset and now lives in Scituate.

Cirone has been with the store since opening day. Cohasset Jewelers, which is located in Tedeschi Plaza, had its beginnings long before coming to Cohasset. After almost 30 years in the Jeweler's Building, Cirone's father, Jerry, decided to move his business to the South Shore. Increasing costs of doing business and the traffic hassle of going in and out of Boston made the move appealing. Jerry Cirone brought his jewelry experience to a pre-existing but struggling jewelry business in Cohasset and renamed it Cohasset Jewelers. Don Cirone, Mark's brother, joined the team a year and half after opening and now serves as the bench jeweler.

"It took us a few years to figure out the taste of Cohasset," says Cirone since the Boston-based business had a much broader spectrum of customers. But once they did the business began to grow and his customers began to trust him with their important jewelry purchases. He is proud of the fact customers feel comfortable handing him a $30,000 watch to be repaired without asking for a receipt.

Over the years, Cohasset Jewelers has grown with its hometown. Cirone says his customers have grown more jewelry savvy and now he carries more fashion forward pieces.

One of the integral and unique aspects of Cohasset Jewelers is 80 percent of the jewelry underneath the sparkling glass counters is made on the premises. In a rear workshop, Don Cirone creates rings, necklaces, bracelets and custom jewelry for the store and clientele. They buy their composite parts to create the jewelry directly from the manufacturer.

"If you are manufacturing the jewelry, you can control the quality and keep the prices low — we cut out the middle man," says Cirone. If a customer needs a repair or purchase the same day, Cohasset Jewelers can complete it.

Today's Cohasset Jewelers is a much different one than 1982's Cohasset Jewelers. There is more of a focus on the fine jewelry, "more important jewelry," Cirone says. High quality diamonds and naturally colored gemstones are two of the hallmarks of his jewelry.

"You won't find any blue black sapphires or light mossy green emeralds or brownish yellow diamonds in our cases," says Cirone, the displays are full of the truest colors of gemstones. But, Cirone is careful to note there is something for everyone with prices ranging from $50 to $50,000.

When Cohasset Jewelers opened on the South Shore, Cirone says they were the pioneers of the marketing idea of "off-price discount jewelry" to the area, beating department store prices and mall "fast-food jewelry stores" in quality and price everyday.

"People learn and realize and come to trust," says Cirone after they don't get the same service and knowledge from a jewelry store.

Cirone is passionate about all types of jewelry, but his first love is estate jewelry. On a typical day he sees two to three people looking to sell estate jewelry. Estate jewelry is a broad term for pre-owned pieces. He will buy the pieces or re-set them in a way better suited for the customer. Finding older jewelry from the days when most jewelry was meticulously handcrafted is a constant search. Some estate jewelry he displays in the store and other pieces he will sell to area jewelers.

Another focus at Cohasset Jewelers is philanthropy — in the last few years they have donated more than $44,000 to the Susan G. Komen Foundation, the largest private funding source for breast cancer research and community outreach programs. One hundred percent of the proceeds from a pink ribbon pin designed by Cohasset Jewelers — pink cubic Zirconia set in 14-karat gold.

To celebrate 25 years of business in Cohasset, Cohasset Jewelers is currently holding a merchandise sale.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by Cohasset Historical Society.

The house pictured above once stood on the property located at the site of 411 South Main St. Although this house was destroyed by fire in 1919, and prior to the fire was not very remarkable, it continues to be the subject of numerous calls to the Society every year.

This house, which was built ca. 1717, is unique because of its connection to one of our most beloved U. S. presidents.

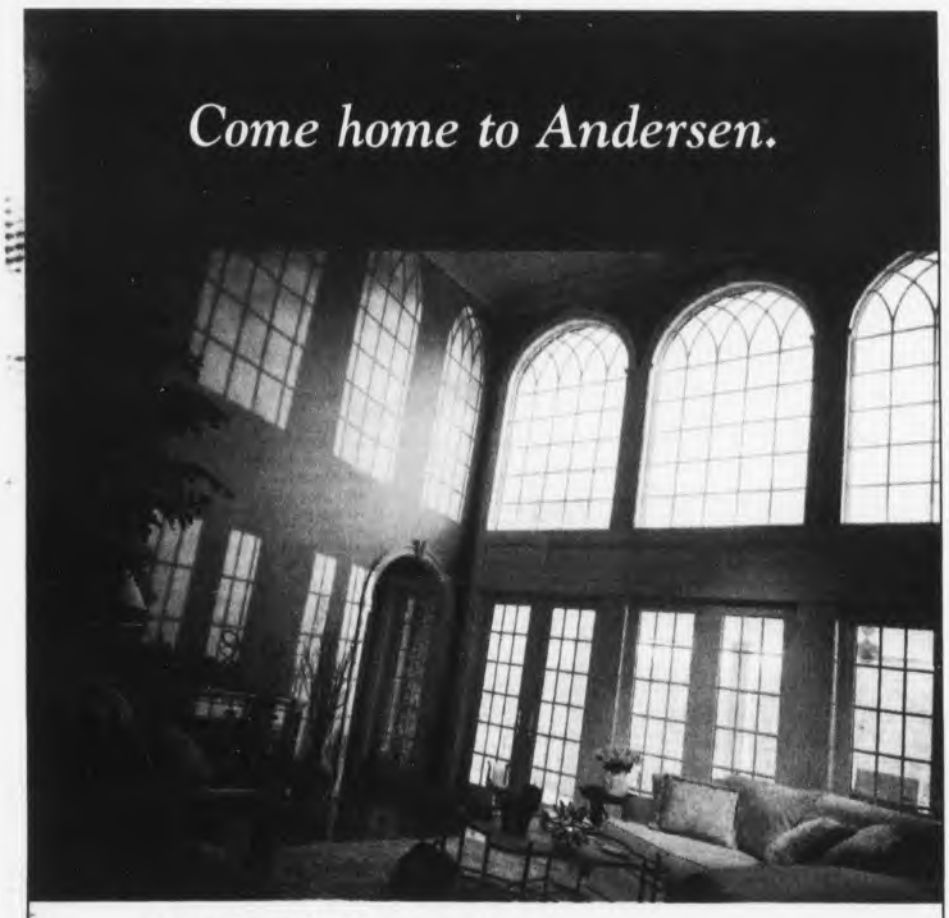
Its builder, Mordecai Lincoln, was the great-great-great-grandfather of Abraham Lincoln. Mordecai owned and operated gristmills on the Cohasset-Scituate boundary line. His son, Isaac, for whom Mordecai built the house, served the town of Cohasset several capacities including moderator, town clerk, selectman, assessor and school committee member and at one point was described as the "father of Cohasset". Next time you are in Washington DC be sure to stop by Ford's Theater and take a look at the exhibit which contains President Lincoln's genealogy which includes Mordecai, Isaac and a reference to the house in Cohasset.

Stop by and visit the Capt. John Wilson House and Maritime museum in the Village. The museums are open Tuesday through Friday from 1 to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Call 781-383-1434 for more information about the Cohasset Historical Society.

A 'Wicked Big Rock' Walk is Aug. 4

Join Mass Audubon educator, John Galluzzo, at 9 a.m., Saturday, Aug. 4, for a geology lesson on the run as he seeks the biggest freestanding rocks around: the glacial erratic boulders of the South Shore. The beauty of these anomalies is that they've each become landmarks for generations of local residents. Each one – House Rock, King Rock, Ode's Den, and others from Cohasset to Hull to Weymouth – has its own human story to tell.

"Wicked Big Rock Walk" will depart from Mass Audubon's North River Wildlife Sanctuary and the fee is $12 for Mass Audubon members and $15 for nonmembers. Pre-registration is required. Attendees are reminded to dress appropriately for the weather. For directions to the North River Wildlife Sanctuary or for information, contact John Galluzzo at 781-837-9400.



Harry Potter party planned for Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys at Shaw's Plaza will celebrate release of "Harry Potter and The Deathly Hallows," by J.K. Rowling with a free party at 10 p.m., Friday, July 20. A substitute teacher for the Care of Magical Creatures will be available with some of her favorite Hogwarts pets, such as a Great Horned Owl, Screech Owl, Black Rat Snake, toad and a rat.

Other party plans include Harry Potter Trivia and Crossword, the showing of a Harry Potter movie, activities, raffles and arts and crafts. Light refreshments will be served. Everyone is invited to come in costume.

Buttonwood is offering a 20 percent discount off the cover price of "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows." Books purchased in advance will receive a ticket that will determine book distribution at 12:01 a.m. All children must be accompanied by an adult.

Those unable to attend can order books by calling Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 or by visiting buttonwoodbooks .com.

'Real people in government want our results'

CSCR UPDATE

CHLOE KOINES

During the first two weeks of training, students learned how to test water samples for enterococci bacteria, nitrates, chlorophyll A and pH.

As the lazy days of summer roll along, students at the Center for Student Coastal Research have been hard at work. CSCR is a nonprofit organization with a central mission to educate students and young adults in the environmental sciences. One of the most exciting and motivating aspects of our projects is that real people in the community and in state government want our results. Over 40 students are working on nine different projects, five of which are wetland sites. The CSCR staff also includes eight Cohasset High School teachers, three professional scientists and three other teachers from the area.

During the first two weeks of training, students learned how to test water samples for enterococci bacteria, nitrates, chlorophyll A and pH. Students also learned how to collect, process and document samples according to rigid protocols established by the Department of Environmental Protection.

CSCR's two main areas of concern are storm water runoff and tidal flushing, both of which can affect the bacteria levels in bodies of water. Students are currently engaged in several projects, including monitoring Little Harbor, Gulf River, James Brook and the Parker Avenue Cut. Also, a small group of students is working alongside the Board of Health to test samples from Cohasset's six swimming areas to determine if the bacteria levels are safe. The underlying purpose of this duplication of sampling is to prove that CSCR students have the ability and facilities to produce bacteria data comparable to a professional lab. In addition, a CSCR staff has recently been formed to work on organization, fundraising and public relations.

Finally, we have been given a significant grant by Microsoft, Coastal Zone Management and the Executive Office of Energy and Environmental Affairs. These much-needed funds have allowed further investigation of the Gulf River, James Brook and Cohasset Harbor, and will allow CSCR to operate on a year-round basis. As the summer progresses, we hope to raise awareness of CSCR and increase our influence in the community. For more information, please visit our Web site a cscr.org.

Stay off the tracks

As early as this week, test trains were expected to roll.

The tentative start date for Greenbush commuter service is Sept. 29.

While the tracks may look appealing to walk along — they can be a very dangerous place.

It is time for Cohasset residents to have a sit-down conversation with members of their family and talk about the train and staying off the tracks.

Many communities have been living with commuter rail or freight trains through their entire existence. There are towns in the Midwest and West that were built around train stations and therefore did not become actual communities after the train barreled through.

Here in Cohasset regular commuter service was abandoned in 1959. So those who lived here at the time and would be able to remember the train would have to be at least in their mid 50s. That means that 2-1/2 generations have been born and raised, and others have moved in without having any "train experience" in terms of their town and neighborhoods.

In short, we are not used to having trains and many of us will not comprehend their awesome force, speed and size until they travel through town.

There are those in Cohasset and area towns who bemoan the fact that Greenbush is making a comeback; there are others who welcome convenient commuter rail service from here to Boston.

But no matter what side of the train debate residents are on – we can all agree that safety is paramount.

Here at the Mariner we do not want to cover any train-versus-pedestrian, train-versus-bicycle, or train-versus-automobile stories. In train accidents, it is very likely the train would "win" and the person walking, riding a bike, or people inside the car would "lose."

Train facts and tips

The Operation Lifesaver rail safety program offers the following railroad safety facts and tips:

- Modern trains are quieter than ever, with no telltale "clackety-clack." An approaching train will always be closer and moving faster than you think.
- Railroad tracks, trestles, yards, and equipment are private property.
- Trespassers are subject to arrest and fines.
- Never drive, ride a bike, or walk around a lowered railroad crossing gate.
- Always wait for the train to pass and for the gates to be raised.
- Trains cannot stop quickly. A freight train moving at 55 mph, or an eight-car passenger train moving at 60 mph, can take a mile or more to stop.
- Don't walk, run, cycle, or operate all-terrain vehicles (ATVs) on railroad property, including tracks, or through tunnels.
- Cross the tracks only at designated pedestrian or roadway crossings.
- Never play or walk on the tracks.
- Observe all warning signs and signals.
- Don't hunt, fish, or jump around railroad trestles. There is only enough clearance on tracks for a train to pass. Trestles are not meant to be sidewalks or pedestrian bridges.
- Don't attempt to hop aboard railroad equipment at any time. A slip of the foot can cost you a limb, or your life.
- Be aware that trains do not always follow set schedules. Any time is train time.
- Don't skateboard or Rollerblade on station platforms or in parking lots.
- Always stand behind the yellow platform stripe.

Operation Lifesaver is a national, non-profit, public education program dedicated to ending collisions, deaths, and injuries at grade crossings and along railroad rights-of-way.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thank you, Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

I am heartened by the outpouring of appreciation and support for the inaugural Cohasset Sprint Triathlon. Thanks to all of you who called, emailed and sent notes to this paper and me with your exceptional feedback.

In the span of just four hours on Sunday morning, July 8, something special was created by many of you reading this column now – our town pulled together in force to support a fantastic charity and cheer the racers to the finish line. So many racers were blown away by the unbelievable support along the racecourse.

I am proud of the fact that the race made a positive impact on so many lives. From one racer who said he is a "better husband and father" to another who said it stood alone as the "best accomplishment" of her life. The race created new friendships and brought families together. The race opened the doors to our incredible community and put Cohasset on the map.

There are countless people who played a role in building this successful event. My team Deb Thomas, Scott Bates, Joe Carrabes, Bill Burnett Sr., and Steve Upson who helped make sure things went smoothly on race day. The safety team led by Chief Hussey, Chief Silvia, Sgt Quigley, Lt. Dockray and Dr. Michael Hughes who provided first class safety for the racers. To Joe Mahoney, Kari O'Donnell, Laurie Regan, Catherine O'Callaghan, Bill Good and Miranda Burnett who worked long hours during race weekend. To the over 125 volunteers (I wish there was room to list all of your names!) who directed and helped the racers at every turn. And, to my wife, Sigrid, who stood by me during the 10 months of planning and organizing the race.

Finally, a special thanks goes out to the town Selectmen, Town Manager Bill Griffin and President of the Sandy Beach Association Robin Lawrence who provided me an opportunity to inspire people to take on a new challenge.

Back in my home state of Michigan, Mitch Album, a sports columnist for the city newspaper, once wrote "the way you get meaning into your life is to devote yourself to your community around you and devote yourself to creating something that give you purpose and meaning." On Sunday morning, July 8, I think we all would agree with Mitch.

Sharing in the 'positives'

TO THE EDITOR:

I am adding my voice to the positive reaction to last week's Cohasset Triathlon. As a Cohasset resident and someone who has been running marathons, biathlons and triathlons since 1983, I cannot over emphasis the professionalism and planning of Bill Burnett, his staff and volunteers.

On a personal level, during my "wave" two of my fellow swimmers who were struggling in the water, were quickly attended to and pulled from the ocean. After the race as I was talking with other competitors, similar praise was expressed and comments around the beauty of the course (Cohasset) were expressed.

Although it is never easy to hear about fellow participants being hurt or in the case the death of a fellow competitor, we should all share in the "positives" of last Sunday. I am already looking forward to next year's race and have emailed information to friends across the country about the race.

'Will it be trick or Treat's?'

COMMENTARY

PETER G. WHITTEMORE

A proposal to alter Treat's Pond and the watershed overflow outlets to Sandy Cove has been quietly promoted to the Army Corps of Engineers and the Board of Selectmen by a few property owners at the affected end of the beach and in the storm water flood-prone area. The only plan that the Army Corps can justify funding is one that creates a new connection between Treat's Pond and the Harbor. I believe this project should not and will not survive under the sunlight of fully transparent public scrutiny, but the public needs to be properly informed and encouraged to voice their concern prior to a Town Meeting vote to appropriate as much as $400,000 for this boondoggle.

Open-minded members of the Board of Selectmen have expressed questions about the nature of the watershed area that includes Treat's Pond. The recollections of people who have grown up in Cohasset and in that area are unanimous: it has always been fresh water. I have gathered written statements from people aged 90 years young and younger about skating on the pond on beautiful black fresh water ice, and remembering the fresh water wildlife and vegetation that dwelled in that habitat. This distinction is crucial to the Army Corps of Engineers' ability to funnel money into the project under their Saltwater Marsh Restoration mandate. They are not funded to touch storm water remediation or fresh water marsh restoration.

An anecdotal memoir written by a resident in the 1940s about a time in the 1840s (40 years before she was born) has been put forward as proof that Treat's Pond was originally saltwater. This cannot be considered historically concrete enough to justify a complete watershed rearrangement as proposed by Mr. Dormitzer and his fellow petitioners as well as by the Army Corps. The memoir speaks of being able to row a boat from Sandy Cove to Treat's Pond. Anyone can row a boat up the Charles River but that doesn't make it salt water. A County Atlas at the Cohasset Historical Society dated 1876 clearly shows an open tributary from Treat's Pond to Sandy Cove, so any notion that a storm of 1851 or 1852 closed off the pond from its former "saltwater" status is not supported by

Grinding up Forest Avenue

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

The road grinder can remove as much as 10 inches of old pavement and reduce it to rubble.

This week the grinder encountered so much ledge it wore right through the grinder teeth.

Forest Avenue – Mass Pavement Reclamation, Inc. has begun the serious work of reclaiming the old paving on Forest Avenue. The very large grinder that you see will remove as much as 10 inches of old pavement and reduce it to rubble. This machine is so powerful that it will even grind through ledge. After a day or two of grinding we found out the hard way that the road consists primarily of asphalt and ledge. This past Tuesday the grinder encountered so much ledge that it wore right through the grinder teeth. So, the machine will sit for a while so it can be repaired.

As an interesting aside, the material that is being removed is highly sought after for use as a base for roadways, since it can be compacted into a very firm base. So, it is highly sought after and in our case, the grindings are being stored at the DPW yard for subsequent use by the Town.

We apologize to the Town, especially to those who routinely travel Forest Avenue for the giant mess that is being created. But, no one ever said it this project would be pretty. Because of the hills and lack of visibility on Forest Avenue, we have had as many as four police details to control the traffic. It might be a good idea to avoid Forest Avenue if you possibly can. For the time being, it will be much quicker to by-pass this road entirely for anyone traveling through. But, if you cannot avoid Forest Avenue, please, please drive slowly.

James Brook, Stewart Brook, & Jacobs Meadow — Over the years there has been a lot of discussion and about James Brook, its terminus at Jacobs Meadow and the harbor, and projects associated with these areas. So, just where is James Brook? James Brook starts at Sanctuary Pond that is between North Main Street, Route 3A and Lower King Street. Sanctuary Pond is part of a conservation area of about 16 acres owned by the Trustees of Reservations. The pond, itself, is between 3 and 4 acres in area, plus associated wetlands. James Brook flows generally southeastward toward Town, following the railroad right of way. Behind the N. Main Street baseball fields it meanders a bit and then crosses under Sohier Street, and flows behind the library to Smith Place. At Smith Place, James Brook goes underground and crosses Pleasant Street to an area behind the ice cream shop. James Brook takes an abrupt turn to the left and crosses under the railroad tracks and the Town Parking Lot on its way to Main Street, flowing approximately under the walkway between the gas station and the bagel shop. At Main Street it makes three more abrupt turns. One onto South Main going toward the Red Lion, another, left onto Brook Street and a third, a right turn to an open channel between the lawyer's office and the Masonic Building. (If we haven't lost you yet, James Brook is now at Jacobs Meadow.) Jacobs Meadow is the large marsh/meadow edged by Summer St., S. Main Street, Elm Street and Border Street. The water from Jacobs Meadow flows out to the harbor under Border Street and the new Veteran's Park.

James Brook carries rainwater from Lower King Street on the Hingham end, Heather Drive, and possibly beyond, to the north, and from Scituate Hill to the southwest. (Scituate Hill is where the Brass Kettle Building and the medical building are located.) You can think of James Brook as being in the bottom of a small valley, collecting storm water from all of the areas surrounding it. Its total watershed is quite large and encompasses most of the areas surrounding North Main Street, parts of Forest Ave. and some portions of 3A

But, James Brook is not the only water feeding Jacobs Meadow. Stewart Brook (sometimes referred to a Stewart's Brook) is the other source of water. Stewart Brook has two legs that ultimately merge together. The first begins at Ellms Meadow (the meadow used for ice skating in the winter), which is near Cushing Road and Spring Street at the railroad closure. Stewart Brook flows from Ellms Meadow, under Spring Street and then turns and flows under the railroad tracks, adjacent to St. Anthony's Rectory where it crosses S. Main Street underground. While underground it partially crosses under St. Anthony's parking lot, makes a left turn and flows in the open behind the home at 134 S. Main St. into Jacobs Meadow.

The other leg of Stewart Brook starts in the vicinity of Castle Road near the railroad tracks and follows the tracks down to the leg of Spring Street still open to traffic. From there it passes under spring St and joins with the Ellms Meadow branch near St. Anthony's Rectory.

So after all of this tedious description, where does Stewart Brook get its water? Primarily from rainwater as it drains all of the area from 100 Pond Street and South Main to at least Castle Road. It also drains Lantern Lane, and the hillside area.

Now you might ask, what's the big deal? Well the Town and the MBTA have spent lots of money on the various parts of James and Stewart brooks to improve the drainage performance of these watersheds, yet there are still issues. Why? We'll talk about some of these issues in future articles, but at least for now you know where these brooks are and where the water they deliver to Jacobs Meadow comes from. We would have preferred to have a map for this discussion, but its details became unreadable when reduced to fit with our article.

Here come da (TV) judge

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I haven't had much to do with judges, the courtroom kind, for the past 25 or so years.

Once I was summoned for jury duty at the courthouse in Dedham.

"What do you do for a living?" asked the judge.

"I write."

"Thanks for coming," said the judge. "Next."

I went home.

Another time, I was covering a voting fraud trial in Quincy District Court when Judge Al Kramer asked me and Pat Desmond, the Ledger reporter, to testify in tandem if we thought the voting instructions were complicated enough so that 500 votes could be counted for the wrong candidate.

We said they were and I guess Judge Al believed us because nobody went to jail.

Again, I was covering a trial in federal court in Boston one time and I got there early to get a good seat when I became aware that the defendant in the trial before ours was Ralph Rhodes, my cousin several times removed, who stood accused of growing marijuana on his farm out in Colrain.

It was comforting to learn that there were other black sheep in the family.

Ralph and I were cutting up family touches when his lawyer, Nancy Gertner, intervened and shooed me back into press row with the admonition never to talk to her client.

Nancy is now a federal judge herself, although I don't think cousin Ralph's case had anything to do with it.

I bring up the subject of judges because they have been in the news lately — not only in the news but making it.

It used to be said that a judge was a lawyer who knew a governor. Now it's a lawyer who not only knew a governor but a TV producer, as well.

The latest judge to go from the bench to the tube is Larry Seidlin, the Florida judge who auditioned by crying on cue during the Anna Nicole Smith soap opera titled, "Who's my baby's Daddy?" He's in training as we speak for a potential CBS series in 2008.

The leading practitioner of judging for television viewers is Judy Sheindlin, who can be seen hereabouts as Judge Judy every afternoon on Channel 4 browbeating those who appear before her and occasionally sharing the tube with a celebrity, like Hollywood hooker Divine Brown of Hugh Grant fame.

Judge Judy's talent as an entertainer is said to bring her — get this now — $25 million a year. In hockey, they have bench-clearing brawls. In TV jurisprudence they have bench-clearing paydays.

Almost all the judges you see on TV are signed by syndicates and their shows sold to the channels individually.

For instance, Judge Glenda Hatchett (Channel 25) works for the Sony TV syndicate as does Judge Maria Lopez (Channel 38), a local starlet who demonstrated toughness in her audition by intimidating an assistant DA and softness by going easy on a child molester.

Sony is now hoping to land another star in Judge David Young, who is said to have knocked their socks off in his audition by jailing two America West airline pilots who tried to fly drunk.

And that doesn't include Judge Marilyn Milian of the People's Court (Channel 38), Judge Greg Mathis (38), Judge Joe Brown (38), Judge Lynn Toler of Divorce Court (25), Judge Cristina Perez of Cristina's Court (25) or Judge Alex Ferrer (25).

Learning about government at Boys' State

COMMENTARY

ERIC MACCARTHY AND ALEX GOETZ

We now know how important it is for us to value the importance and the difficulty of government in today's world.

Have you ever heard of Boys' State? No? Well, neither had we until we were offered the opportunity to attend the Massachusetts Boys' State, sponsored by the American Legion at Stonehill College, this past June 9 through 15. Boys' State is a program run through the American Legion, which was founded in 1919 to promote patriotism, to create equitable treatment for all war veterans and to strengthen national security. The Boy's State program was established over 50 years ago. "Boys' State developed from the concept that youth should be offered a better perspective of the practical operations of government; that the individual is an integral part and commensurately responsible for the character and success of his government." In short, their goal is to teach young men about government, its structure and leadership. For one week at Stonehill College, with close to 400 other high school juniors, we experienced a great opportunity, which taught us the importance of our involvement in government and leadership. We were selected by the school to attend as the two representatives of Cohasset High School and our costs were fully funded by the Cohasset chapter of the American Legion George H. Mealy Post 118.

At Boys' State we both had different, but equally important, experiences. We met many new friends from around the state who had similar interests and who were just as excited about being selected as we were. Beginning at registration, everyone at Boys' State was split up into counties, towns or cities, and political parties, either Federalist or Nationalist. Everyone rooms with a person from their town but from the opposite party. Each town had about three counselors that keep everything organized. The counselors are graduates of the program, some of them only a year removed while others have been volunteering for years to give back what Boys' State provided them.

Our day was split up into mealtimes, recreation periods, municipal meetings, party conventions, mini-courses, electives and a general education period. During the recreation period kids played different sports and competed against other towns. Some kids though ran a Boys' State newspaper, called The Citizen, which reported on everything that occurred during the week. In municipal meetings we worked together to solve issues that were given to our town and had to work with a budget. During general education a speaker always came and talked to us about government and leadership. One night we received a visit from Gov. Deval Patrick who spoke to us about his road to success and plans for our state during his term as governor. Mini-courses were short sessions about different topics and electives were a little bit longer sessions but there were only three to choose from: Law, Government and Economics. Finally, there were party conventions where we elected our candidates for statewide office and created our party's platforms with stances on different topics that surround our government today.

Although we both had different experiences, we both came away learning a lot. We now know how important it is for us to value the importance and the difficulty of government in today's world. We are sure to carry our experiences with us as we move into the next chapters of our lives. We would like to thank the George H. Mealy Post 118 for giving us the opportunity to attend Boys' State 2007.

Eric MacCarthy and Alex Goetz are high school students and Cohasset residents.

environment, using the freshest ingredients to create inspired pastas, pizzas, roasts and braises representing virtually every region of Italy." Tina Watson described the fare as "eclectic."

"I think you'll be pleased with what we're going to do," said Tina Watson.

The variance granted gives relief from the land limitation bylaw. In the town's bylaws for the village business district, multi-family dwellings, or apartments, are allowed by special permit if the building lot is over 40,000 square feet. If a building lot is less than 40,000 square feet, like the hardware store and all of the other village buildings, the ZBA needs to grant relief from the bylaw.

Back in early May, the Watsons applied for a special permit. The ZBA determined a special permit was not necessary and what they really needed was the variance from the 40,000 square foot bylaw. A variance is a more stringent application process with more guidelines.

Key to the approval of the special permit and the variance is proving the applicant would be deprived of reasonable use of the building. The strongest argument for the approval was that many (or perhaps most) of the buildings in the village business district already have apartments on the second floor. Concord Square Development, the town's village consultant, was able to provide the ZBA with an accurate count of apartments in the downtown area (29 rental units). This piece of information was influential in showing the board the hardware store building was one of the few buildings without apartments on the second floor.

"Essentially we need to recognize this is a unique building. I think the town wants [the building] to be preserved and in that I believe it deserves a variance," said ZBA member Ben Lacy.

The ZBA's approval was issued with some conditions. A full Planning Board site plan review is required, with any substantive changes coming before the ZBA again, as determined by the Building Inspector. A comprehensive sprinkler system would be installed and approved by Fire Department officials. The roof, which the plans showed being raised eight inches, can only be raised at most a foot.

"This has been our home for 50 years and we're appreciative of the board's consideration," said Jim Watson. The approval, he said, means the building could remain in his family for the foreseeable future.

CLF's Beechwood St. parking lot approved

The Cohasset Land Foundation got a green light from the Planning Board for its proposed common driveway and gravel parking lot for a future park off Beechwood Street. Previously, the CLF came before the Board with a Form A application and the board requested CLF to come back with a layout of the common drive, which includes the addition of a water main.

Glenn Pratt, Chairman of the Water Commission, discussed the need for a larger water main in the area to feed into the fire hydrant. After a brief discussion, the Planning Board voted unanimously to approve the revised plans.

The CLF expects to close on the property on July 31 and then move forward with its laid out plans for the 37.5 acres. Osborne Ingram, current owner of the property, stipulates in the purchase and sale agreement that 50 percent of the land remains undeveloped and be a park named in Ingram's father's honor. The park will be roughly 22 acres and include a gravel parking lot for public use. Voters at the Annual Town Meeting allocated $40,000 of CPC funds for the project.

The not-for-profit CLF plans to subdivide the property. According to plans laid out for the Selectmen and the public in recent months, the land will be split between the Vedanta Center (6.25 acres), the three buildable lots (6 acres) and the remainder, roughly 25 acres will be open space and/or conservation land. The three buildable lots will be sold to fund the entire land purchase price of $1.25 million.

Cook Estate's public hearings nearing a close

The development proposed by Abbott Real Estate and Development is nearing the end of the public hearing process. At the Planning Board meeting on July 11, drainage, development entrance and exit widths and a new home design were the major topics of discussion. The town's engineer consultant, John Modelewski, will continue to iron out details on the technical aspect of the project with the developers.

The new home design will be approximately 2000 square feet and will serve as the development's primary option. The smaller one-story design (originally the designs were 2,200 square feet and up) is a result of a fair amount of market interest in smaller homes.

The name of the new development when the homes go to market will be the Cook Estate, developers said.

GOP 8 hosts event at Black Rock July 25

GOP 8, a coalition of South Shore Republican town committees, is sponsoring an informative social event at Black Rock House in Hingham from 6 to 9 p.m., on July 25. Guest of honor will be Charles Baker, president and chief executive officer of Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, a nonprofit health plan in New England.

As a result of these accomplishments, many in the Republican Party have been mentioning Baker as a possible candidate to challenge Gov. Patrick in 2010.

Under Baker's leadership, Harvard Pilgrim has placed first in the country for three consecutive years for annual ranking of health plans for member satisfaction and clinical effectiveness by the National Committee for Quality Assurance. The company has also been rated among the "Best Places to Work" for five consecutive years by the Boston Business Journal. As a result of these accomplishments, many in the Republican Party have been mentioning Baker as a possible candidate to challenge Gov. Patrick in 2010.

GOP 8 consists of the Republican town committees of Scituate, Hull, Marshfield, Duxbury, Norwell, Weymouth, Hingham and Cohasset, which support Republican candidates and activism in the region.

For tickets and other information, visit gop8.com or call David Grossack at 617-965-9300.

Garage dance

There will be a dance at the Garage from 7 to 10 p.m., on Friday, July 20. Students in grades six through eight are welcome. There will be a door charge of $5 per person. Snacks and refreshments will be sold.

This is not a school function.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. Beacon Hill Roll Call records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from the week of July 9-13. There were no roll calls in the Senate last week.

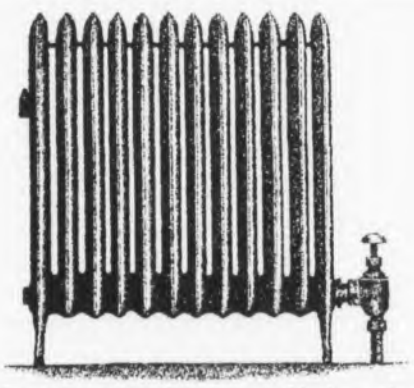
IDENTITY THEFT (H 4144)

House 155-0, approved a bill aimed at stopping identity theft and preventing an impostor from opening a new credit account using stolen personal information. The measure has been proposed for many years but it gained steam this year following the revelation by Attorney General Martha Coakley that she was a victim of identity theft and the disclosure by TJX Cos. that credit card information was stolen from its computers. A key provision of the legislation allows a consumer to temporarily "freeze" his or her credit report and prevent the three major credit bureaus from issuing the report without his or her consent. Consumers would be issued a PIN number to temporarily unfreeze their credit reports when they apply for credit. Most companies will not issue credit without a credit report and would deny an impostor's application for credit when a credit report is frozen. The one-time cost to the consumer to freeze his or her credit report is $5. Consumers would also be required to pay $5 each time they unfreeze the account. Companies would be prohibited from charging a fee to victims of identity theft or their spouses. The measure also requires all businesses and state and local governments to notify consumers quickly when there has been a breach of security that might compromise a customer's privacy and establishes strict procedures to be followed when they dispose of paper documents and computerized data that contain personal information. Supporters said that identity theft is now a major problem and has affected the lives of many people across the nation. They noted that Massachusetts is lagging behind more than 30 states that have laws dealing with this crime. Only final Senate approval is needed prior to the proposal going to Gov. Deval Patrick. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill).

MORE TAX CREDITS FOR COMPANIES MAKING FILMS IN MASSACHUSETTS (S 2288)

House 148-4, approved a bill lifting until 2022 the $700 million per film cap on tax credits that the state gives movie production companies which make films on location in Massachusetts. The Senate approved the measure on a voice vote and sent it to the governor. A law approved in November 2005 provides tax credits and other incentives to these companies but also includes a $700 million cap on the credits. Supporters said that the initial law has brought in more revenue in the past year from moviemakers than in the combined seven years prior to its approval. They argued that the $700 million cap should be lifted because neighboring states like Rhode Island and Connecticut now offer more tax credits and incentives than Massachusetts. They said that unless the cap is lifted, Massachusetts will continue to lose millions of dollars in business, jobs and taxes to other states. Some opponents said that the state should not offer tax credits to a wealthy, private entertainment industry while education, human service programs and local aid are still severely underfunded. Others said that the tax credits are simply another example of "corporate welfare" that helps a narrow business sector and urged the Legislature to instead approve more broad-based tax relief for small businesses. The House on June 13 approved a similar version of the bill on a 153-1 roll call. (Both roll calls are listed below. The first one is from June 13 and the second one is from last week. A "Yes" vote is for the bill lifting the $700 million cap. A "No" vote is against the bill).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL



GIVE STATE EMPLOYEES 12 PAID DAYS OFF ANNUALLY TO VOLUNTEER - Gov. Patrick held a rally at the Statehouse to encourage state workers to participate in the newly-expanded State Employees Serving as Volunteers (SERV) program. Patrick issued an executive order to expand this program that began under former Gov. William Weld as a limited one that allowed state workers only to volunteer as mentors at schools. Executive orders do not need legislative approval. Patrick's SERV now gives a day off each month to an estimated 50,000 state workers to volunteer at a public entity, including public schools, or an accredited non-profit organization while still collecting their full state salary and benefits. The program provides a list of dozens of approved organizations and allows workers to request permission to work at an organization not on the list. Many activities are prohibited including participation in recreational or athletic activities, fundraising, politics, pro-choice or pro-life organizations and programs designed to promote religious belief. The SERV website says: "The program goal is to encourage state employees to serve as volunteers within Massachusetts communities thereby helping to improve the educational and economic interests of the Commonwealth and to help create a more just society." Supporters say that the program includes a strict system and safeguards to prevent any abuse. Critics say that it is unfair to pay state workers to volunteer while collecting hard-earned taxpayers' dollars. Some say that the program invites abuse and predicted that a lot of workers will volunteer on Mondays and Fridays. Details on the program and the list of allowed and excluded organizations can be found online at: www.mass.gov/Ehrd/docs/policies/leave/serv_guidelines.doc

STATE BUDGET (H 4141) - Gov. Patrick signed into law a $26.8 billion fiscal 2008 state budget. The governor vetoed some $41 million in spending. The Legislature is reviewing the vetoes. A two-thirds vote of each branch is needed in order to override a veto.

DIABETES, COMMISSION ON BLACK MALES AND DAY CARE CENTERS - The Committee on Children, Families and Persons with Disabilities held a hearing on legislation allowing schools to examine some overweight students for diabetes (S 99). The proposal applies to pupils whose body mass index (BMI) is at or above the 95th percentile as determined by the National Center for Disease Control. BMI is a measure of body fat based on height and weight. The Committee is also considering a bill requiring that public schools list the amount of carbohydrates contained in all food products served to diabetic children and teachers (H 123); creating a permanent 21-member Commission on the Social Status of Black Males (S 2182) and requiring all day care centers to have cameras and listening devices installed in every room except restrooms (H 124). The proposal exempts private home day care centers with less than five children.

Central air conditioning

for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat.

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort® system doesn't require large metal ductwork, or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small, round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort® offers Lennox high efficiency air conditioning.

Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

documented fact. This should be considered along with a government survey map dated 1852, from Reverend Bigelow's supervised "History of Cohasset," which also shows the tributary and mentions no clam-digging or lobstering nor any salt evaporation vats at Treat's Pond. There's a reason why we call it a pond.

Setting aside for the moment any debate of the supposed "salt water" content, modern historians like to talk about the attempt to study and recover a "usable past." The stagecoach days were interesting, but not so usable today. The train – we'll see. But to propose to restore the Treat's Pond/Sandy Cove watershed area to its pre-1850 state would be to remove 60 percent of the houses that now exist there. Is that a usable past to which we should return?

I submit the real question is how to help Treat's Pond self-remediate. The sewering of the area for which funding has been approved by Town Meeting vote, to be completed in 2-3 years, will start to alleviate the saturation of soil that failing leachate and cesspool systems have created. These systems were designed for dry weather summer use only and for decades now have been overburdened and added to with year-round fluent usage. Basically the sponge is full and can't dry out to handle the overflow. Why should the town pay for more than that until we see how it helps? Storm water remediation and filtration techniques, such as those used by the Water Department are available, attractive and affordable for the area residents to finance for themselves. As a rule it is environmentally unethical to take fluid from one watershed area and send it to a completely separate, in this case to Cohasset Harbor, area without concern for cross contamination, or for raising the level of fresh water burden on and already overburdened area. In fact, who's to say that Cohasset Harbor water would be such a gift to Treat's Pond? The fishermen know that as it stands now the Harbor cannot even flush itself out.

I have gathered written statements from people aged 90 years young and younger about skating on the pond on beautiful black fresh water ice, and remembering the fresh water wildlife and vegetation that dwelled in that habitat.

Until the sewer project now underway and the storm water committee recommendations to come have had a chance to show results, the logical helping hand we can give Treat's Pond is to extend the overflow outlet pipe at that end of the beach as has been done at the Lothrop Lane end and to harvest and clean out the congesting weeds in Treat's Pond.

Recreation thanks sponsors of Playground Program

To the Editor:

As we approach the halfway point of this summer, the Cohasset Recreation Commission extends their most sincere gratitude to the following businesses and civic organizations for their financial support for our seven-week playground program:

Goodwin Graphics, Pilgrim Bank, Stop & Shop, Cohasset Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #9146, Kristine A. Grazioso DMD, Feng Shui Restaurant, South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset Collision Inc., George H. Mealy Post #118, Fiori's Exxon, The Good Sport, Goodale Insurance Agency, Lehr and Barnes Insurance Agency and MKR Building Solutions.

Via sponsorship generosity, community interest and support we were able to enhance our ability to serve the community through our day camp-like seven week Playground Program for children ages 3 1/2 through 12 years.

Playground Program sponsors names/logos are printed on all the children's and staff's T-shirts – approximately 250 shirts total. Further, sponsors are listed on many of our year round publications. Sponsorships are available starting in March of each year by calling the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109 for letters and information.

Our deepest gratitude is extended on behalf of the children, parents and playground staff to this year's sponsors.

Wellspring Executive Director is honored

Vinny Harte, Executive Director Wellspring

Wellspring now has a thrift shop in Hingham as well as in Hull, a food pantry with daytime and evening hours and offers year-round computer classes at the Hull center.

The Rotary Foundation of Rotary International awarded Wellspring Executive Director Vinny Harte the honor of selection as a Paul Harris Fellow. The award is presented in appreciation of tangible and significant assistance given for the furtherance of better understanding and friendly relations among peoples of the world.

Harte accepted the award on behalf of Wellspring Multi-Service Center at a recent meeting of the Rotary Club of Hingham.

Harte started at Wellspring in 2003 and during his tenure has initiated new programs and expanded services including the Hand In Hand residence, the Ticket to Ride transportation program and the Pathways to Success by 21 adult education program. Wellspring now has a thrift shop in Hingham as well as in Hull, a food pantry with daytime and evening hours and offers year-round computer classes at the Hull center.

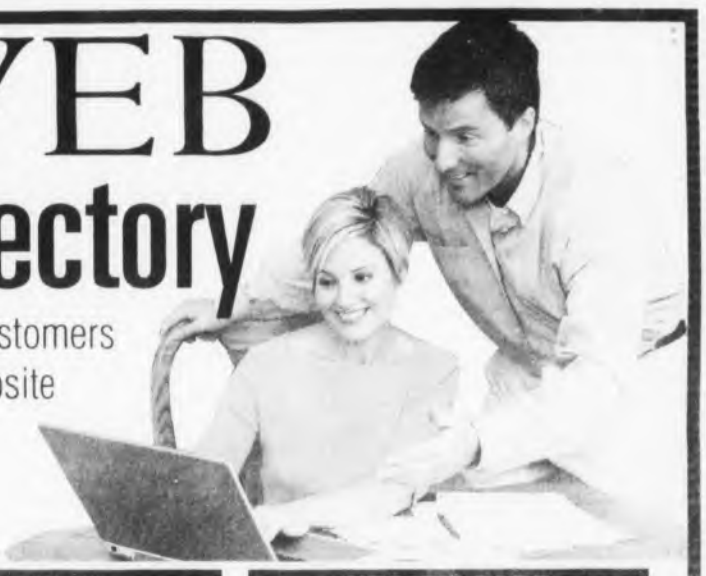
Wellspring is a private, nonprofit, multi-service organization located in Hull. Wellspring's mission is to provide support and skills to people facing challenges to their financial, physical or emotional well being in order to help them achieve independence and self-sufficiency.

It is the aim of all Wellspring programs to reach beyond providing emergency services to help people to become more independent and productive members of the community. For information call 781-925-3211, or contact monica@wellspringhull.org.

Wellspring honored with grant from Governor

Wellspring Multi-Service Center was recently honored with a grant from the Patrick-Murray Inaugural Committee Foundation. The Patrick-Murray committee is distributing more than $500,000 left over from this year's inauguration to nonprofit organizations exemplifying excellence in their field.

Of the 1,500 Massachusetts nonprofit organizations that applied for this funding, only 215 were selected and Wellspring was the only organization from the South Shore.



"We are grateful for the support of the Governor and honored to be selected for this award," said Vinny Harte, Executive Director of Wellspring. "The contribution and affirmation that this grant imparts will help us continue to lend a hand up to the hundreds of South Shore neighbors who need our help."

"We are grateful for the support of the Governor and honored to be selected for this award."
— Vinny Harte, Executive Director of Wellspring

According to Liz Morningstar, co-chair of the Patrick/Murray Inaugural Committee, "Each organization chosen is a vital member of the Massachusetts community whose work epitomizes the compassion, creativity, and strength of our state. We tried to ensure that the money was awarded as resourcefully as possible," said Morningstar. "The many deserving charities that applied for funding are not only a testament to the vitality and imagination of Massachusetts' charitable community, but also to the overwhelming need of thousands of our fellow citizens."

Health Notes

Let's us know what you think about Adopt-A-Street guidelines

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Several weeks ago, local resident Jim French met with the Selectmen to discuss the possibility of establishing a local "Adopt-A-Street" litter clean up program. At that time, the board expressed support for such a program and requested that our staff work with Jim to develop the details. Accordingly, an outline for the program was established as follows:

Draft "Adopt-A-Street" guidelines including program safety rules for volunteers and a program application/agreement.

Tara Tradd at the Board of Health will be the contact person for the town to keep track of volunteer groups and selected clean-up locations.

Jim French and Tara Tradd will identify areas of town most in need of adoption, and Jim will reach out to local companies and organizations to promote the program. This is where we'll need your help: Call or email the BoH about suggested Adopt-A-Street locations.

Qualifications:

Those who are proud of their neighborhoods and wish to enlist their neighbors in keeping it up. We'd also like to know where you think the DPW – an already overworked agency that spends many hours picking up other people's trash– should concentrate. Remember, there are other agencies in town that own large tracts of property, visited by most of us, which need picking up occasionally. If you'd really like the town to start cleaning up other people's property, say so – at Town Meeting – and be ready to pay for it. Also, to meet state guidelines, the BoH will provide safety vests, gloves and bags to the volunteer groups, and will also erect a sign at the adopted area recognizing the adopting group.

BoH proposes the following Statement of Commitment:

"The Town of Cohasset 'Adopt A Street Program' is a partnership between the Town of Cohasset and volunteers in an effort to keep our community clean, safe and attractive. By working together we can continue to provide a beautiful environment in which to live and raise a family. The program also educates and encourages people to stop littering and take pride in their community."

We envision that any group or local company willing to make the expected commitment described below can adopt a street, portion of a street, park or public area. Volunteers from civic and conservation organizations, social clubs, neighborhood associations, individual families, churches, school groups, private employers and employer groups are encouraged to participate. Also, individuals or families may adopt an area in their neighborhood and not be bound to the formal program provisions below.

What is expected?

Adopting groups are expected to adopt a street, portion of a street, park or public area for at least a two-year period. The group is expected to pick up litter in their adopted area at least once every two months, with particular emphasis on holiday weekends and summer months.

Adopting groups are also expected to follow safety rules given to them by the program coordinator, which is available at the BoH. They must provide adult supervision to groups of children under the age of 18, and program participants must be at least 11 years old. They should wear appropriate clothing, including safety vests and gloves to be provided by the town, provide their own drinking water and first aid kits, and they should alert the program coordinator if they find a safety hazard in their area.

Adopting groups should appoint a liaison that will work with the BoH coordinator, to confirm the area to be cleaned. The liaison should notify the program coordinator when and where the group cleaned, who participated, and any concerns that requires the town's attention.

The cleanup

It is up to the adopting group to organize themselves. During regular business hours, the adopting group will obtain trash bags, reflective vests and gloves from the Department of Public Works. The volunteer liaison will then call the Department of Public Works to make arrangements to have the trash bags picked up if necessary.

Mutually agreed ground rules, a copy of which may be obtained at the Board of Health, are a part of the commitment by the town and participants.

Let the Board of Health know what you think of the idea.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Toothpaste warning from Board of Health

The following was provided by the Cohasset Board of Health.

U.S. Food & Drug Administration has issued two warnings this month about certain toothpastes manufactured in China and South Africa that may contain a toxic chemical called diethylene glycol.

In the United States, these products are typically being sold at dollar-type discount stores, convenience stores and small food markets.

Suspect tubes of toothpaste have reportedly been found in Somerville and Sturbridge, as well as in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Florida.

As of June 8, there were no U.S. reports of poisonings from toothpaste containing DEG. The chemical, which is commonly found in antifreeze, is sometimes used illegally as an inexpensive sweetener and thickening agent.

Residents should throw away or return to the store for refund:

1) Any toothpaste labeled as "Made in China."

2) Any fake "Colgate" toothpaste, which is:

- Labeled as "Manufactured in South Africa."
- A 5-ounce or 100 ml tube.
- Contains misspelled words on the label, including "South African Dental Assoxiation," "SOUTH AFRLCA" and "isclinically."

Harborview Apartments get state funding for facelift

Subsidy and project funds give 60 Elm St. a boost

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"The residents were so happy when the windows were put in, they're glad to put up with the remainder of the construction inconveniences."
— Kate Luna, Cohasset Housing Authority

The state has reached out a helping hand to 64 seniors living in Cohasset. With the help of Cohasset's state legislative delegation, the town's only affordable housing units, the Harborview complex at 60 Elm St., will soon have new doors and a re-paved parking lot, in addition to a $50,000 past-due state subsidy.

"We're very happy," said Kate Luna, managing agent for the Housing Authority. The grant and subsidy come on the heels of a resident's letter to state Rep. Garrett Bradley detailing numerous problems with the facility. As a result, Bradley visited the site to see for himself.

"What I found was a driveway that became frozen and therefore dangerous to walk on, bills that needed state assistance to meet and slider doors that would never open in time in a fire," stated Bradley in a press release. Following his visit, he contacted Governor Patrick's office that in turn sent Associate Director Amy Schectman from the Division of Public Housing and Rental Assistance. After seeing the need, Schectman and Bradley worked with the Housing Authority to identify funds.

A $50,000 past-due subsidy from the Department of Housing and Community Development was awarded in late June. The award allowed the outstanding invoices, the largest of which was for a water bill, to be paid in full. The state-funded housing required regular subsidies because the rent alone does not cover all the expenses, said Luna.

Previously, a building envelope project was undertaken with the help of both a state modernization grant and Community Preservation Act funds. The in process project involves new siding, windows, doors and roofing, said Luna. The state approved an expansion of the project to include new patio doors to replace difficult to open sliders. In the spring, the parking lot and driveway will to re-paved to make it safer for residents and visitors.

"The residents were so happy when the windows were put in, they're glad to put up with the remainder of the construction inconveniences," said Luna. The contractor has made an effort to limit the construction intrusiveness by spending only one day in each apartment.

The Harborview complex at 60 Elm St. consists of 64 units of subsidized housing in 16 buildings. The units are for income qualifying senior citizens 60 and older. There are also 12 units for the developmentally disabled. The complex was built with state funds in 1974.

Since that time, it remains the only housing units that "count" toward the town's affordable housing inventory in the eyes of the state.

Aquarion calls for voluntary outdoor water conservation

Aquarion Water Co. of Massachusetts is calling for its Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset customers to voluntarily reduce outdoor watering activities, effective immediately. The move is due to high water demands the company has experienced along with the recent weather patterns consisting of extended hot and dry periods.

During this period of voluntary conservation, Aquarion suggests that customers limit outside watering to every other day and take other conservation actions listed below.

If the voluntary measures do not reduce demand, Aquarion will implement the second phase of its water management program, which requires mandatory outside water use restrictions. During this phase outside usage is limited to watering by hand and only on odd or even numbered calendar days that corresponds to an odd or even numbered street address.

The third phase of the program does not permit any outside water usage. "These voluntary outdoor water use restrictions are being placed into effect now to help us manage our MA DEP Water Management Act Registration, the low rainfall and warm weather," said Larry Bingaman, Aquarion senior vice president, operations. "Under the Water Management Act, Aquarion is only allowed to pump an average 3.51 million gallons per day on an annual basis," he said. "During the summer, we have found that water usage will about double, and most of that increase is due to outside watering." For the past few weeks, Aquarion's water production has ranged from 4.0 MGD to more than 5.0 MGD.

"Due to the lack of rain and high water demands, Accord Pond is about 60 percent full, compared to normal levels of about 70 percent for this time of the year," Bingaman said. "However, a couple of steady rainfall events could bring the pond to normal. With everyone's voluntary help now, we can conserve a precious resource and not go to mandatory restrictions."

Aquarion recommends several ways to use water wisely outdoors and inside the home to help in the water conservation effort:

- Water lawns and gardens only when they need it. Don't follow a set watering schedule. Water grass and plants by hand only when they show signs of wilting. An easy way to tell if a lawn requires water is to step on the grass and then step back. If the grass stays flat, then it needs to be watered. If the grass springs up, it still has plenty of moisture.
- Deep soak lawns and gardens when they are watered.
- Water by hand long enough for the moisture to soak down to the roots where it will do the most good. In this way, the lawn will develop a deeper root system that requires less watering and is more disease resistant.
- Water during the cooler parts of the day to avoid evaporation. Heat and wind will rob lawns and gardens of water before it can be used. Watering before 9 a.m. or after 6 p.m. helps to prevent evaporation.
- Automatic sprinkler systems should be set for manual operation. This prevents needless watering when it is raining or when there has been adequate rainfall. Be sure to direct all sprinklers so that water contact is with vegetation and not wasted on sidewalks, streets or driveway.
- Hand held watering is strongly encouraged. Hand watering allows one to direct water to the specific area that needs water. Don't leave a garden hose unattended. More than 600 gallons of water can be wasted in only a few hours.
- Repair all leaks indoors and outside. A dripping faucet that leaks one drop per second wastes about 2,700 gallons per year.

Other indoor conservation tips: Avoid running dishwashers and washing machines with partial loads. Turn off the water while shaving, brushing teeth and washing face or hands. Fill water jugs and refrigerate to avoid running the water to get it cold.

of the first rotating orchestra," he says seriously, but then laughs, "hope springs eternal."

The "Tribute to Oscar and Tony" Pops tour features a "cinematic sing along" where Lockhart will give the audience the opportunity to be a part of the show. They have put together a compilation of well-known movie songs, including "Over the Rainbow" from "Wizard of Oz" and "As Time Goes By" from "Casablanca."

"It's a cool thing," and it may be even cooler in the Music Circus's small setting, he says.

The intimate setting takes on a new level when Lockhart attends an after-party held at the South Shore Arts Center. The party offers him a chance to visit with about 200 audience members post-performance.

"Normally the audience is just made up of faces in the crowd — you don't get the chance to meet them, thank them for their support and hear what they thought of the concert," says the genial maestro. In past years, Lockhart has ditched his concert tuxedo for the comfort of a pair of chinos and a brightly colored Hawaiian shirt before arriving at the after-party held at the South Shore Arts Center.

"You can feel the audience sharing in the performance."

— Keith Lockhart, Boston Pops

This year's after-party is a tribute to the night's musical performance; organizers hope to bring out the glitz and glamour of Hollywood and Broadway, including a red carpet entrance and special decorations, "we want guests to feel like they are coming to a Hollywood premiere," says SSAC assistant director Diane Kennedy.

The whole night is about the musical arts supporting the visual arts and bringing two pillars of Cohasset arts together for one night. In past years the Boston Pops event has raised $40,000 for the Arts Center's year round programming.

"Every concert ticket sold helps the Arts Center out," says Kennedy, "it helps us meet the demands of our arts education and exhibition programs."

The SSAC hopes to continue bringing Lockhart and the Pops to Cohasset each summer. "this is the fourth annual concert and we're already looking forward to the fifth annual," says Neer.

Boston Pops concert tickets are still available in person at the South Shore Music Circus box office or through Ticketmaster (www.ticketmaster.com or 617-731-2787). A limited number of Pops Gala tickets ($300 pp, including the after-party at the SSAC and concert) are available through the Arts Center, 781-383-2787.

Macoska will play sixth carillon recital

Patrick Macoska, carillonneur at St. Mary of Redford Roman Catholic Church, Detroit, Mich., will play the sixth recital in the 83rd annual series of Summer Carillon Recitals on the carillon of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, on Sunday, July 29. Featured will be original carillon music by Leen't Hart, Ronald Barnes and John Courter, a group of hymn arrangements and a group of Scott Joplin rags.

The hour-long recital begins at 6 p.m., and is free of charge. It will take place regardless of weather conditions. In case of rain, the bells may be heard from parked cars. Printed programs, schedules and brochures will be distributed on Cohasset Common, and will also be available in a stand by the courtyard of St. Stephen's Church on Highland Avenue extension. Listeners are invited to bring chairs, blankets and picnics to the common or the church courtyard. Following the program, the tower will be open to visitors for a demonstration by the carillonneur and a look at the bells.

More information may be obtained by calling St. Stephen's Church at 781-383-1083, church carillonneur Sally Slade Warner at 978-475-2599 or assistant carillonneur Mary Kennedy at 781-383-9599.

Cohasset U12 softball on a roll this summer

These girls have played as a team for only a few weeks, and were inspired by the coaching of Mike Mullin, Laura Chase and Mark Healy.

The Cohasset U12 Williamsport softball team brought Cohasset softball further than any team in Cohasset history, winning the Williamsport U12 Division 8 championship.

The series started in Dudley against the Dudley all-star team, with Christine Chase pitching Cohasset to a 7-5 win. Jen Mullin had crisp fielding to snag line drives down the third base line, and led the team in two rallies (with two outs) to tie the score going into the sixth and final inning. Cohasset scored two runs in the top of the 6th to win.

Danielle Healy looked like "Spiderwoman" on first with beautiful stretches to catch everything thrown her way. Christina Healy kept the runners in check with strong defensive play in left field. This was an exciting back-and-forth game that had the fans on the edge of their seats.

The girls next played a formidable Plymouth team in Sandwich. In spite of a big rally in the fourth inning, Cohasset fell short, 12-5.

The girls were not deterred and next faced Dudley again in Hingham. Cohasset was at the top of its game, with several fabulous plays. The pitchers were Caitlin DeAngelis and Mullin. DeAngelis also had a big hit early in the game to start a strong rally. An agile and poised Leitra Kimla beat a run down between second and third base, and went on to steal home. Christine Secatore showed some deft fielding at second.

Cohasset was leading until the top of the sixth when Dudley scored five runs and went up by three. However, Cohasset responded with four runs, with Kate Sookiasian knocking in the winning run with a monster hit to left field. Sookiasian was strong in the field, too, making a critical outfield catch on tip of her toes in the sixth inning. Cohasset won the game, 10-9.

The girls avenged the loss to Plymouth, in Plymouth, by beating them on Monday the 16th. This 4-3 win secured a spot in the state sectional finals. Chase continued her accurate, bullet-fast pitching for 10 strikeouts in a pitchers' duel. Hitters Michaela Rattanbury and Scarlett McQuade had strong singles and were sent home by a Kimla line drive. DeAngelis brought Leitra home with a hit, followed by slugger Grace Pozniak sending DeAngelis in to score.

The girls were undaunted by the previous Plymouth game, kept their cool and gave the white-knuckled fans an example of softball at its best. This game secured Cohasset's berth in the state sectional tournament final.

Despite an incredible double play by Kayla Orner (left field catch to tag second base with bases loaded), the polished Lynn Wyonna team, with faultless defense ended the ride for Cohasset under the lights at Worcester State College.

These girls have played as a team for only a few weeks, and were inspired by the wonderful coaching of Mike Mullin, Laura Chase and Mark Healy. Barbara Mullin ensured that the extensive paperwork was in order and Mark Chase advised the team on the Williamsport procedures.

The team will continue to play travel softball locally through the end of July.

Legion finish summer on a winning note

Cohasset Post 118 finished its season with a three-game winning streak, culminating with an 8-1 defeat of Stoughton Monday night.

The team got another outstanding pitching performance from Brian Hill, who gave up one unearned run on five hits and struck out seven batters. With the win, Hill finished the season with a 4-2 record.

Stoughton picked up its only run in the first inning to take an early 1-0 lead. In the bottom of the fifth, Post 118 exploded for all eight of its runs. Cohasset loaded the bases when Coady Morgan walked, Kenny Muir hit a double to deep center field, and Pat Doonan was hit by a pitch.

Tommy Chase singled to score Morgan to make it 1-1. Ryan Little reached on a fielder's choice to plate Muir and make the score 2-1. Justin Whyte reached on another fielder's choice to score Doonan and make it 3-1. Singles by Michael Signorelli and Chris Barrow each drove in a run, and a Robert Dongara groundout to first scored Signorelli to make it 6-1.

Morgan singled to score Barrow, who stole second, for the seventh run. Doonan singled to score Morgan to make the score 8-1 after five innings. In the seventh inning, with two runners on, Ryan Ferriter, playing left field, threw a strike to Signorelli to throw out the runner for the last out of the game.

Cohasset Post 118 won its last three games and four of its last six games. For the season the team finished 7-13.

Post 118 3, Quincy 1

In an outstanding pitching performance by Ferriter, Cohasset Post 118 started its season-ending run with a win over Quincy last Wednesday. Ferriter gave up only one run on three hits and struck out five batters in a complete game.

In the second inning, Quincy got on board with a solo home run to deep left field. In the third, Justin Whyte reached first base on a fielder's choice and scored on a triple by Signorelli to the right center field gap to tie the score at 1-1 after three innings.

In the fifth, Little led off with a walk and advanced to second as Signorelli reached first on a throwing error by the third baseman. Kyle Pinkus singled to score Little which made the score 2-1 after five innings. In the seventh inning, Pinkus singled and advanced to second on a perfect sacrifice bunt by Morgan. Chase singled to score Pinkus to make the final score 3-1.

Post 118 7, Morrissette 4

Cohasset Post 118 defeated Morrissette Friday behind the excellent pitching of Sam DeGiacomo. DeGiacomo gave up four runs on seven hits and struck out three batters in six innings. In the bottom of the seventh inning, Jeff Simpson came in and worked out of a jam to pick up the save.

In the first inning, Doonan singled and advanced to second on a ground ball by Chase to the pitcher on a hit and run. Doonan scored on a single by Whyte to make the score 1-0. In the second inning, Pinkus, Morgan and Dongara all singled to load the bases. Pat Doonan doubled to deep left center to plate to clear the bases and make the score 4-0. Chase followed with a single to score Doonan.

Morrissete picked up one run in the bottom of the second and

South Shore Outlaws are hungry

Plymouth-based semipro football team looks to rebound from tough 2006 season

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

After an undefeated 2005 regular season that saw it advance to the league championship game – where it lost 7-0 – the semiprofessional South Shore Outlaws football team dropped to 3-7.

That, coupled with the fact that the Outlaws went 0-9 in their inaugural New England Football League (NEFL) season in 2003 and followed it up with a 5-5 playoff season in '04, is indicative of the culture of the sport at this level, said Outlaws owner and general manager Ron Rezendes.

"Guys have jobs or family situations that change. It's kind of up-and-down with semipro football," Rezendes said Friday. "That's the nature of it."

With that said Rezendes believes the Outlaws will turn things back around this season.

"We've picked up some real good players to fill some gaps," Rezendes said.

Among those players are linebacker Hank Andersom (Duxbury), who recently performed in the NFL pre-draft scouting combine; defensive end Nick Tam (Plymouth), who was part of a U.S. All-Star team that played in Europe; and quarterback Matt Letourneau (Brockton).

There are six players - Curtis Archie, fullback Jay Callahan (Taunton), wide receiver Cesar Chanlatte (Plymouth), nose tackle Luis Martins (Brockton), cornerback Brian Rezendes (Plymouth) and offensive lineman Eric Krall (Kingston) – that have been with the team since its inception four years ago.

The Outlaws players range in age from 18- to 37-year old. Ross Anderson, who makes the commute from Connecticut to the team's games and plays on the team's extra point unit.

"Our age and experience level is pretty well mixed," Ron Rezendes said. "I think the mix of ages keeps the team balanced and helps stabilize the team."

Offensive coordinator John Tossetti, one of the Outlaws'

All-Scholastic girls track team

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and we do feel secure that we chose the top public school girls track athletes for this honor.

It should be noted due to the large number of athletes in the Community Newspaper Company region, we split the athletes into two teams for girls track: North and South. This is the Community Newspaper Company North girls track squad comprised of athletes from Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Silver Lake, Pembroke, Cohasset and Duxbury.

Amy Caldwell – Senior
800 meters/mile – Braintree

Set a pair of school records this spring to cap an exemplary high school athletics career…One week after breaking the Wamps' record in the 800 (2:17), Caldwell put her name atop the BHS record books in the mile (5:15); both records were over two decades old…Both times would have put her in the top-10 at All-States…Bay State Conference All-Star has also run the 200, 400 and two-mile for Braintree…In case you haven't heard, Caldwell also plays a little soccer. It is on the pitch where the Parade All-American will continue her athletic endeavors at Boston College.

Jacky Hull – Sophomore
200 and 400 meters – Braintree

Talented sprinter a major reason for the Wamps' recent resurgence in track and field…Bay State Conference All-Star finished with the league's best times in the 200 (25.91) and 400 (59.6)…Finished third in the Div. 1 state meet 200-meter race (26.41) to qualify for All-States, where she finished 11th with the same time…All told, Hull went 13-1 in her dual meet races this season…Also ran an impressive 12.9 in the 100-meter dash during the regular season…Hull also plays field hockey and runs indoor track for BHS.

Stephanie Boss – Junior
100 meters – Hingham

Just call them the Big Red Machine…Hingham was absolutely dominant on the South Shore sprinting scene this season thanks in large part to Boss' consistent performances in the dash…The junior was one of three talented 100-meter runners for the Harborwomen and was the top finisher among the pack at the Div. 3 State Meet, winning the event in 12.83…Her finish there was essential to the Harborwomen wrapping up the team title at the meet…She advanced to the All-State Championships and finished seventh overall (12.9)…Boss was second at the Patriot League Championships (12.86) to teammate Molly O'Dea…Ran a leg on Hingham's 4x100-meter relay, which won the title at the Patriot League Meet and was third at the Div. 3 States and 10th at All-States…Boss will be among the top returnees to the indoor and outdoor track teams next year.

Molly O'Dea – Freshman
100 meters – Hingham

Talk about an exciting debut, O'Dea surged to the 100-meter title at the Patriot League Championships (12.75)…Went undefeated in the league and against her Hingham teammates before Boss edged her at the Div. 3 State Meet…There, O'Dea finished second in 13.06…The freshman was an essential part of a Hingham team that won the Patriot League crown (8-0), State Relay title, and Div. 3 State titles this spring…The Patriot League All-star took second at the State Coaches Invite (12.67) and won 100-meter titles at the Freshman/Sophomore Meet (12.83) and Route 228 Meet (13.14)…Ran a leg on the Hingham 4x100-meter relay that finished third at the State Meet and 10th at All-States…Just a freshman, O'Dea has a lot of running left to do at HHS.

Brigid Koenen – Sophomore
300-meter hurdles – Hingham

This sophomore was the top 300-meter hurdler in the Patriot League this season winning the event at the Championships with a time of 48.17…Koenen took fourth in the event (47.64) at the Div. 3 State Meet, which Hingham won…This qualified the sophomore for the All-State Championships…Also a talented triple jumper, Koenen placed fourth in the event at the Patriot League championships (30-01)…Ran a leg on Hingham's 4x400-meter relay team, which won the Patriot League Meet title and finished fifth at the Div. 3 State Meet…Just a sophomore, Koenen still has a lot of running to do at HHS.

Shauna McNiff – Sophomore
Mile – Hingham

This talented young runner was the best miler in the Patriot League this spring…The sophomore won the mile event at the Patriot League Championships (5:28.48)…She went onto take sixth at the Div. 3 State Meet (5:22.51), just missing a trip to the All-States…McNiff's top six placement at the States helped the Harborwomen team capture the team title, its first in the program's history…McNiff also ran a leg on Hingham's 4x800-meter relay squad, which was tops at the Div. 3 States and 13th at the All-State Championships…A three-season runner in cross country and indoor track, the Patriot League All-star still has two more years to run at HHS.

Katelyn Allen – Senior
Multi-event – Marshfield

The Lady Rams finished second overall in the final Atlantic Coast League standings (7-1) and Allen was a major reason why…The ACL All-star routinely competed in three to four events in dual meets this spring and consistently scored points in all of them…Allen was a standout in the 800 meters and long jump, but also competed in the shot put and on relay teams…Nearly went undefeated the 800 meters and long jump in every meet this season, taking first in both events against everyone but Dennis-Yarmouth and Falmouth, making Allen the leading point-getter for Marshfield…Won the long jump title at the ACL Championships with a seasonal best leap of 16-4.5…Was also second in the 800 meters (2:24.2)…Qualified for the Div. 2 Meet in the 800 meters and long jump but did not compete…A cross country and indoor track runner as well, Allen will look to continue her career in college.

Molly Shanley – Junior
Distance – Marshfield

A consistent performer on the distance front, Shanley was the Atlantic Coast League champion in the two mile this spring (11:56.09)…Competed in the mile at the Div. 2 State Meet and finished a strong third in her best time of the year (5:23.76)… Finished 20th in the event at the All-State Championships (5:40.06)…Swept the mile and two mile events in a pair of regular season meets this spring, and routinely finished first in one or during the rest of the spring, helping the Lady Rams finish second overall in the league (7-1), first within their own North Division…Also anchored home the team's winning Distance Medley Relay at the Div. 2 State Relays with a 5:27.27 mile…An ACL All-star in cross country, indoor track, and outdoor track, Shanley will return to captain all three teams next year.

Taylor Aizenstadt – Sophomore
Triple/high jump – Norwell

Clippers' sophomore emerged as one of the area's best jumpers in her first season of high school track…Aizenstadt was the Div. 4 state champion in the triple jump, with her leap of 35-9.25 rating over seven inches higher than the next competitor…Took second in that meet in the high jump (5-3)…Qualified for All-States in both events…During the regular season, Aizenstadt had a career high triple jump of 36-4…South Shore League All-Star also won the triple jump at the freshman/sophomore state meet, breaking the meet record in the process…Aizenstadt also plays basketball at NHS.

Berkley Hall – Freshman
Triple Jump/Hurdles – Pembroke

A terrific all-around athlete, having earned all-scholastic honors in gymnastics and volleyball, Hall really shined this spring for the Titans…Hall qualified for all-states in two events as a freshman, finishing eighth in the hurdles. She also finished second at the Division 4 meet in the 100 hurdles, and third in the triple jump…She was also second in both events at the Patriot League meet, which earned her All-Star recognition…Hall was voted team MVP, and will be around for three more years to make a run at state titles…Head coach Greg Zopatti said, "She's a very gifted athlete, she could play any sport. She's very coachable and works real hard."

Kathryn Nathan – Sophomore
800 meters – Pembroke

Nathan turned in a solid season that culminated in the Division 4 meet where she finished second with a time of 2:20.68, which was good enough to qualify her for All-States…In that meet she ran a personal best 2:18.56, which was good for 11th place…She set a meet record at the Freshman-Sophomore meet in winning the 800 meters…In the Patriot league meet she won

The top 400-meter runner on the South Shore this season, Bohenek went undefeated in the 400 meters this season in the Patriot League and won the title at the league championships (59.95)…The junior has yet to be beaten in the league in the 400, going unbeaten as a freshman and this season…Missed her sophomore season due to injury…Also won the triple jump at the Patriot League Meet (33-8)…Bohenek took second in the 400 meters at the Div. 4 State Meet (59.22) and sixth in the triple jump (34-6)…Advanced to the All-State Championships in the 400 meters and took 13th overall in 59.44…Ran at New Englands in her freshman season…Also a talented cross country runner and basketball player, Bohenek will return to all three squads next year at RHS.

Sarah Rogers – Sophomore
Long jump – Silver Lake

According to her coach Rogers is the true definition of an All-Scholastic… "She is a very smart kid on and off the athletic field," head coach Joe Darche said…Rogers placed 20th in the long jump at All-States with a distance of 15 feet, 5 1/4 inches…She finished fourth in the long jump (15 feet, 10 1/2 inches) at the Division 2 State Meet…Rogers finished fifth in the 200-meter dash (28.34 seconds) and fourth in the long jump (14 feet, 7 1/2 inches) at the Patriot League Meet…She is one also one of the fastest sprinters and hurlders for the Lakers…Rogers received a spot on Patriot League All-Star team for the spring…She is also a standout soccer player for the Lakers.

Relays

4x100 – Hingham
Stephanie Boss – Junior
Molly O'Dea – Freshman
Abby Glenzel – Senior
Anna Uretsky – Senior

This quartet was the top 4x100-meter relay squad in the area going undefeated in the Patriot League and winning the event at the Patriot League Championships (51.07)…The girls went onto finish third in the event at the Div. 3 State Meet (50.27), qualifying them for the All-State Championships and setting a new HHS record…There, the girls were 10th in 50.49…The group won the 4x200-meter relay at the Div. 2 State Relays, tying the HHS record…Boss, O'Dea, and Uretsky were among the top 100-meter runners in the league this season, while Glenzel was the league's best 100-meter hurdler, winning the event at the league meet…Glenzel and Uretsky leave big voids to fill on the relay, but Boss and O'Dea are among the top returning athletes to the relay and the Hingham team.

4x400 – Weymouth
Emily Clark – Freshman
Jenn Bell – Sophomore
Kayla Sullivan – Sophomore
Sam Bennett – Sophomore

This young and talented group has a chance to be very special down the road…This group was named to the Bay State League All-Star team for running the fastest time in the league at 4:09 against perennial power Newton North…They ran a 4:08.36 at the Class A meet, which was good for fifth place and a berth in the All-States meet…At All-States they came in eighth with a time of 4:06.29, which earned them a berth in the New England meet…They were the first Weymouth team ever to qualify for New Englands…They broke their own school record for a fourth time of 4:03.14 at the New England meet.

4x800 – Hingham
Maggie O'Connell – Junior
Mackenzie Lussier – Sophomore
Caryn Miller – Junior
Shauna McNiff – Junior

This foursome was tops at the Div. 3 State Meet this season, winning the event in 9:48.22 to help guide the Hingham girls to their first state title…The relay earned a bid to the All-State Championships and took 13th in 9:59.73…This same quartet won the 4x800 at the Div. 3 State Relays, helping the Harborwomen take home the team title…O'Connell, Miller, and Lussier all ran the 800 meters during the regular season and went 2, 3, 4 at the Patriot League Championships… McNiff was among the top mile runners in the league this spring, winning the event at the championships…The all underclassmen quartet will return to track team next year.

Bay State Games 2007

The annual Bay State Games got rolling last week, and while a handful including hockey has yet to begin many of the sports began Thursday and concluded Sunday.

Brian Hill Jr. pitched five solid innings and got the only win for the South Coast baseball team that finished 1-3 last week at Bentley College.

In boys basketball, the 11/12th grade group from the Southeast which featured Braintree's Brian Ellis, Weymouth and BC High's Nick Schmiemann and Scituate natives Alex Danowski and Sean McCarthy, captured the gold medal. The Southeast girls squad featuring a pair of Abington natives in Joelle Belotti, and Erin Gillis took home gold has well. The Coastal squad finished in third with the Bronze medal as Molly Cahill (Halifax), Marie Freitas (Easton), Nicole Marotta (Bridgewater), and Kelly O'Neil (Bridgewater) contributed to the effort.

Scituate's Bobby Corbin, meanwhile, participated in the junior wrestling competition at UMass Boston on July 13. Corbin finished in third place for his division to earn a medal.

On the softball field the Southeast team ended up with the silver medal. The roster was loaded with locals including Mackenzie O'Dea, Jess Gillis, Sarah McIssac, and Jill Coyle of Weymouth, Megan Walsh and Julianne Barry of Randolph, Emily Donovan, Jacqui Saluti, and Alison Saluti of Braintree. Abington's Laura Pistorino also took part, and her older sister Julie served as an assistant coach.

Hingham natives Federico Kelly, and Joseph Eisenbies, along with Weymouth's Joe Delaney helped the Southeast's soccer squad capture the gold.

On the lacrosse field the combined team of Southeast/Coastal finished with the gold. Among the locals on this combined squad included Kelsey Riley, Liz Fitzgerald, Paige Burns (Hingham) Kara O'Connell (Norwell), Kerry Kiley, Cara Pisano (Mansfield), and Kim and Katie Stazinski (Pembroke).

On the boys side, the Coastal squad came up short in the finals, and settled for silver. Matt Donovan (Kingston), Nick Beattie Elwin McCarthy (Duxbury), Andrew Bourget (Mansfield), Brian Josephine (Plymouth) Brad Gordon, Scott Peacock, and Steve Burgess (Bridgewater) all contributed.

The Southeast team finished with the bronze medal, and featured a quartet of Braintree natives in Brendan Dalton, Ryan Holbrook, Kevin Lydon and Christian Sullivan. Dalton contributed two goals and an assist in the bronze medal game, while Lydon had two goals and three assists. Holbrook and Sullivan anchored the Southeast defense.

Registration for Cohasset Town Soccer is now open for the 2007-08 fall/spring season, for kids in grades pre-K through 8th. Register on line at www.cohassetsoccer.com

Youth football clinic

Any boys or girls entering grades 4-8 this fall are invited to take part in the First Annual Cohasset High School Football Youth Clinic on Aug. 18. This is a one-day skills clinic that emphasizes fun and will help anyone become a better football player.

Applications can be found in the Recreation Department's summer mailing or they can be obtained at the Sci-Coh football web site, www.scicohfootball.com. If you have any questions, contact CHS head football coach Pete Afanasiw at pafanasiw@cohassetk12.org.

South Shore Outlaws are hungry

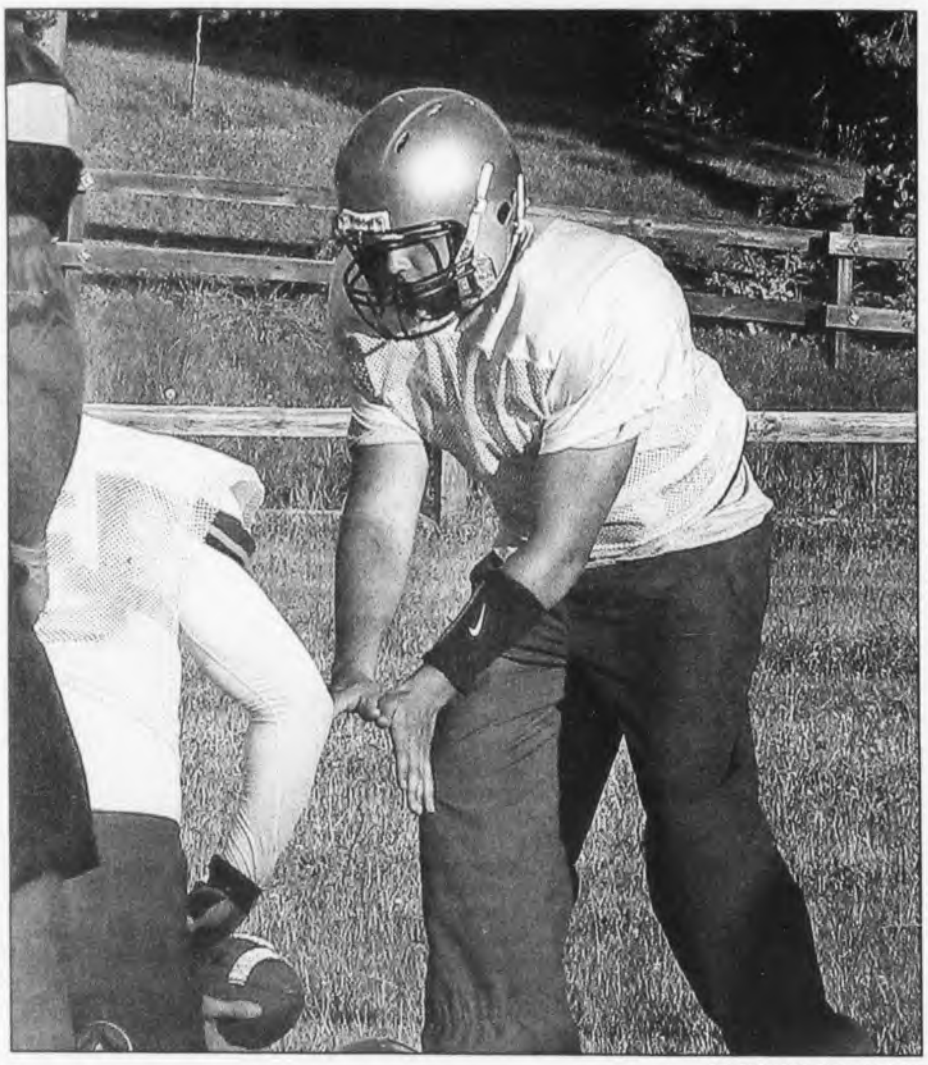
original players in '03, hopes Letourneau can lead a rejuvenation on the offensive side of the ball. Offense was a team strength in its undefeated regular season of '05, but took a hit last season due to a loss of significant personnel.

Look for weekly updates on the South Shore Outlaws throughout the season.

Rezendes said linemen Kris Barry (Wareham), Jake Santos (Taunton), Joe Virden (Brockton) and Rory Thomas (Wareham) are among the key players up front that will protect Letourneau and open holes for four-year veteran running back Brian Lewis (Plymouth). Tight end Dave Rodrigues (Wareham) is another important cog in the offense, while John Carpenter (Plymouth) returns as the Outlaws' kicker.

Second-year head coach Greg Lowspeid also serves as the Outlaws' defensive coordinator, and he has several key returning starters at his disposal. Leading the battle in the trenches are defensive ends Derek Bruno and Dave Reed (both of Plymouth), and defensive tackles Steve Medeiros and Wes Swain (both of Wareham). Mike Ross (Plymouth) plays some defensive end and outside linebacker, with inside linebackers Matt Costello (Wareham) and Peter Kane (Plymouth) patrolling the middle.



Cornerback Eddy Holmes (Roslindale) will help lead the secondary. Carpenter also serves as the Outlaws' punter.

The NEFL is split into three conferences: the Colonial Conference (AAA), North Atlantic Conference (AA) and Maritime Conference (A). Each conference is split into two divisions.

The Outlaws play in the North Atlantic, Pioneer Division. The Outlaws are one of five Massachusetts-based teams in the Pioneer, including the defending AA-champion North Attleboro Renegades.

The Outlaws open their 10-game schedule this Saturday, July 21, at 7 p.m. against the Whaling City Clippers at Plymouth South High School, the Outlaws' home field.

Dream season ends for Little Leaguers

Despite a masterful pitching performance by Jamie Timothy, Cohasset's Williamsport Little League season came to an end Sunday night with a 1-0 loss to Braintree American.

Timothy took the ball to the mound with the confidence and experience to silent the powerful Braintree bats, and he did. The only blemish on the night was a leadoff home run to the number eight batter for Braintree (Cam Gilbert) in the third inning. The rest of the night, Timothy kept the middle of Braintree's order off balance with a variety of breaking balls and change-ups.

Timothy was helped in the field by the stellar fielding of Kyle Healy, Mike O'Brien, Shane Haggerty, Nick Tangherlini and the strong arm of Connor Goetz behind the plate.

The baseball gods were not in Cohasset's favor on this night, as with any good team you also need to be lucky, and there was no luck in this game. Colin Gideon-Murphy hit a potential game-tying homerun only to have Braintree's Zach Hellested leap over the fence and make a brilliant catch in centerfield.

Later in the game, Haggerty lined a two-out single and then Healy followed with a line drive down the leftfield line. Haggerty, motoring around the bases, was being waved home with the tying run when the ball became lodged under the fence in leftfield. The ball was ruled dead and Haggerty was sent back to third, a very questionable call but by rule an umpire's judgement call. Braintree's Joe Chaisson retired the next batter to survive the fourth.

Cohasset did not manage another baserunner the rest of the game and Chaisson pitched a complete game shutout. Christian Davis (two), Haggerty and Healy had the only Cohasset hits on the night. Braintree American now advances to the final 16 in the Massachusetts Little League Tournament.

This group of 12 teammates represented the town of Cohasset with extraordinary class and sportsmanship and played an excellent brand of baseball in the meantime. They should be proud of what they have accomplished, not only this year but since they won their first district championship as 9-year olds.

Trevor Schramn should be included in this group as well, as he was a big part of both championships, as 9-year olds and last year's 11-year old championship team.

one run in the third to make the score 5-2. In the fourth inning, Dongara hit a bomb to the right center field fence for a triple. Muir hit a sacrifice fly to score Dongara and make it 6-2 after four innings.

In the top of the fifth inning, Whyte and Signorelli both walked and Pinkus singled to load the bases. Morgan grounded out to second to score Whyte and make it 7-2. In the bottom of the inning, Morrissette picked up one run to make the score 7-3. Morrissette picked up one more run in the seventh to make the final score 7-4.

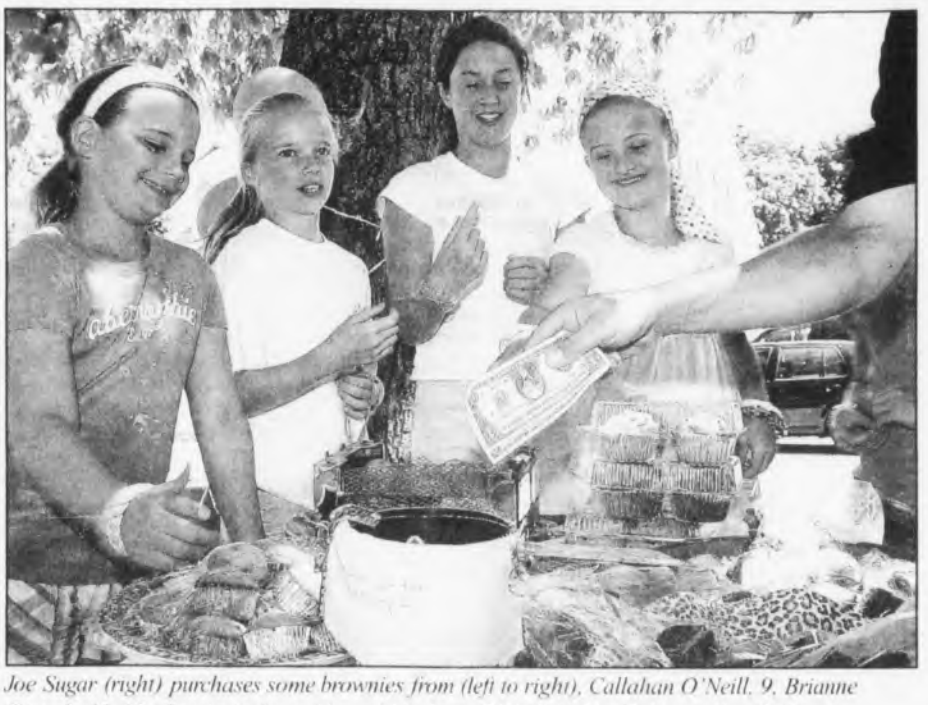
Tennis benefit for Children's Hospital

Karen Sugar of Scituate goes up for a serve on the impeccably kept courts at the Roy residence during the Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament. Organizers hope to raise $15,000-$20,000 this year.



Nick Anderson, right, of Cohasset, goes back to hit a volley while Karen and Joe sugar of Scituate wait for his return during their match in the annual Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament. This year's event benefits the newly created Suicide Prevention Program at Children's Hospital.

Sandy Crough of Cohasset, and a veteran Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament participant of 18 years, reaches for the ball while practicing her net game on the O'Neill courts before her match.

Nick Anderson of Cohasset gives a high-five to his partner Corey Axelson during the second set. They have played in the tournament for the past five or six years. Matches were played July 14 & 15 on privately owned courts around town.

At home singing opera

Quincy's Barbara Quintiliani performs with BMO

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

South Shore opera fans will have a chance to see and hear one of their own next month when Quincy's Barbara Quintiliani appears in the Boston Midsummer Opera (BMO) production of "The Tales of Offenbach" — a revue of the operas of Jacques Offenbach — at Boston University's Tsai Performance Center.

"We don't do much Offenbach these days, but he was a rock star as an opera composer in 19th century Paris," says Quintiliani of the Frenchman whose comic operas rivaled the serious works of Gounod and Meyerbeer in their time. "This music is perfect for the summer. And what this staging by BMO does is showcase some wonderful New England talent singing some really beautiful music."

Performed with a full orchestra, conducted by Susan Davenny-Wyner, "The Tales of Offenbach" was conceived by BMO Artistic Director Drew Minter as a program that would be both humorous and touching, featuring selections from Offenbach's best-known comic operas including "La Perichole," "The Brigands," "The Tales of Hoffman" and "Orpheus in the Underworld." Performed in English and French, the production marks Quintiliani's debut with the composer.

"This is my first experience singing Offenbach. I usually sing Verdi and the Italian repertoire. This will be my first time singing French opera on stage. I will be singing the role of Antonia in 'The Tales of Hoffman,' which is based on the life of E.T.A. Hoffman, a composer, doctor, and amateur physicist."

When the three-performance run ends, the 30-year-old Quintiliani — a young dramatic soprano who made her professional debut opposite Placido Domingo in the 2002 Washington National Opera production of Mozart's "Indomeneo" — will prepare for a fall trip that just may launch her on the next phase of what is shaping up to be a very promising career on the world opera stage.

"In September, I have been invited to audition for La Scala, The Rome Opera, and Pietro San Carlos in Naples. These opportunities came about because I won first place in the Francisco Vinas voice competition in Barcelona last year," explained Quintiliani by telephone last week from her home. "I won the Verdi Prize and the Prize of the Public, becoming the first American in 20 years to win."

Barbara Quintiliani

The recognition was just the most recent for the New England Conservatory graduate. When she was just 22, Quintiliani took first place in the Boston region of the Metropolitan Opera Competition and went on to win the grand prize at the nationals. Quintiliani also counts the much-coveted opportunity to sing with Domingo as an early career high which she will never forget.

"I loved that experience. That was the first time I actually sang a role with arias onstage. The company didn't treat its young artists as apprentices, but as professionals who were there to do a job. I was in the second cast, but they did give me a stage rehearsal, and Placido Domingo himself came in to work with me on our scenes together. It was a sink-or-swim situation, and it brought me up to the next level."

It also gave her a chance to see an opera legend at close range.

"Being on stage with Placido Domingo is a lesson in life and art. He defies all the odds as a tenor to still be singing as well as he does in his 60s. He is an artist of the finest quality. He still takes voice lessons all the time and he still willingly takes direction. He also crosses all barriers to sing with pop stars and to get to know just about everybody. When I worked with Domingo, he had Al Pacino, who is a big opera fan, hanging around backstage waiting for him. Domingo is just amazing."

Opera first amazed Quintiliani when she was just a teenager.

"My stepfather was in the military so we were living in Virginia when I first discovered my voice at Bayside High School in Virginia Beach. I needed a fine arts credit to graduate, so they put me in the chorus. I wasn't very happy about that so I spent my time passing notes. But then the teacher made some of us learn the solo in the Faure Requiem in order to get a passing grade. I was 16 and I remember thinking 'Are you kidding me?' I thought Barbra Streisand was classical music. I had never heard that kind of music, and about the only soprano singing I had ever heard was on a cartoon soundtrack, so I just went in and mimicked that sound. I thought everyone would just laugh at me. Instead someone asked me who I studied voice with. I didn't even know you could study voice."

Shortly after, Quintiliani was taken to see a production of "Carmen" at the Virginia Opera.

"It sucked the wind out of me in a good way. I thought, 'Wow, I really want to do this.' It gave me a purpose in life. They let me into the School for the Performing Arts, and I was on my way. Singing brought me positive responses the way nothing else in my life ever could have. Whether it is a birthday party or at the Met, singing just makes me unbelievably happy."

While pursuing a career in opera may require her to travel the world, Quintiliani has no plans to leave the South Shore where her family has lived for several generations.

"My grandfather, Bruno Quintiliani, made his living as a stone cutter in the Quincy Quarries. He and his brother, Luigi, also operated Quintiliani Granite in Quincy for many years. My grandfather also loved music and art. I understand he used to listen to Enrico Caruso records while he worked in his basement," says Quintiliani. "I will travel the world to sing, but my home will always be here."

("The Tales of Offenbach" will be performed Aug. 1, 3, and 5, at the Tsai Performance Center at Boston University, 685 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston. For tickets and information, call 617-227-0442 or go online at bostonmidsummeropera.org.)

Movie review

Sirius Black (Gary Oldman) and Harry Potter (Daniel Radcliffe) must get over their fear of Lord Voldemort.

'Phoenix' rises

"Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" (B+)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

The trouble with Harry in "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" is fear, repression, suspicion, resentment, sexual longing and....Did I mention fear? In short, adolescence.

As if that were not enough, Harry (17-year-old Daniel Radcliffe) has just been expelled from Hogwarts and must confront that acne of the soul also known as He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named a.k.a. Lord Voldemort (Ralph Fiennes). Voldemort is back, as anyone who saw the previous installments in this remarkable series based on the bestsellers of J.K. Rowling, knows.

Voldemort's baleful influence is already everywhere. The Ministry of Magic has installed one Dolores Umbridge (Imelda Staunton) at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. Dolores is pretty evil in pink and a stickler for bogus rules. For Umbridge, criticism of any of her policies is the equivalent of disloyalty. Hmmm, where have I heard this before? Minister of Magic Cornelius Fudge (Robert Hardy) has smeared Harry's name, accusing him and the venerable Albus Dumbledore (Michael Gambon in a dressing gown) of nefarious doings. Harry is forced to lead a rebellion of Hogwarts students and form Dumbledore's (rebel) Army in the hopes of repelling the Dark Lord's Death Eaters.

Compared to "Transformers," "The Order of the Phoenix" is a virtual Dickens novel on the big screen. More than a little redolent of "Oliver Twist" and "David Copperfield" and featuring such Dickens-meets-Ian Fleming names as Severus Snape (Alan Rickman), Sirius Black (Gary Oldman), Luna Lovegood (newcomer Evanna Lynch) and — ahem — Nymphadora Tonks (Natalia Tena), "Harry Potter" movies are cotton candy for the literati.

Yes, Harry, who is noticeably shorter than Hermione Granger (a charming Emma Watson) and Ron Weasley (the talented Rupert Grint), gets to snog with Cho Chang (Katie Leung) in this outing. And, yes, the whole series is a metaphor for growing up, and, yes, there are "Thestrals," Centaurs and a Giant... Oh, my.

But it's the love of language that gets me every time, that and the way Rickman gets more mileage out of a syllable than any living actor. Staunton, for her part, punctuates every evil decree with a high-pitched giggle. For me, one of the best metaphors for these "Harry Potter" films are those talking books and letters. This is story-telling come to life.

First-time "Potter" director David Yates, a TV veteran, does not screw it up. The climactic showdown suggests the light-saber duel between Obi-Wan Kenobi and Darth Vader, and as that implies, some elements in this fifth installment in the series have a familiar face. But "Harry" is still going strong.

Best of all? Quidditch season has been cancelled.

Rated PG-13, "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" contains violence and some gore.

JoJo is on the go-go

From music to movies, local teen star on the rise

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Joanna Levesque

Like most typical Foxborough teenagers, Joanna Levesque likes to hang out at the mall. Unlike most girls her age, however, Joanna – a pop and R&B singer and actress who, under the stage name "JoJo," has released two platinum-selling albums on the Universal Motown label — sometimes signs autographs while she's shopping.

"People shouldn't be surprised to see me at the South Shore Plaza. I love the Plaza, especially Rock Bottom. That's where I went on my very first date," explained JoJo by telephone from Los Angeles recently. "I always have fun with my friends when I'm home."

Some of those friends may be in the audience when JoJo plays the South Shore Music Circus on July 18 and the Cape Cod Melody Tent on July 22 in support of her second album, "The High Road," which was released last fall.

"I did my first album, 'JoJo,' when I was 12, and then I took time off from recording to do two movies, so this second album reflects who I am today. My music has a pop sensibility with a soulful sound to it," says the 16-year-old, who had her first number one single, "Leave (Get Out)," before she was out of junior high. "I won't go back into the studio for another year and a half. I want to be the best I can be so I want to finish high school and then do the third album."

These days, JoJo spends more time on a tour bus than on a school bus. In her just-completed sophomore year with the Laurel Springs School distance learning program, however, she still managed to keep straight A's on her report card.

"School is a very big part of my life. I'm home schooled and my tutor is wonderful. I feel very fortunate with everything that is happening for me, but I know I also have to focus on high school and I do. I love history. It is my favorite subject," says JoJo. "My favorite phrase is 'Impossible is Nothing.' I definitely want to be more than just a singer. And, as of now, I really want to go to college."

With recently completed tour dates in Mexico, Europe, Africa and the U.K., and with U.S. dates ahead for this summer and beyond, JoJo may have to squeeze in the SATs between concerts. Last summer, the first single from her second album, "Too Little, Too Late," was released to radio stations. The single debuted at number 90 on the Billboard Hot 100 and in its fifth week on the chart rose from number 60 to number three before eventually landing at number one — the biggest jump ever in Billboard history. Her latest single, "Anything," was released in June, and features a sample from the Toto hit, "Africa." JoJo doesn't only like to sample other artists on her recordings, she also likes to listen to them, too.

"Right now, I'm listening to Soul Child, The Dixie Chicks, R Kelly, and Jill Scott. I also like Daughtry quite a bit. It doesn't matter whether its rock, country or reggae. I like all kinds of music."

That interest came along early in life for the young singer. JoJo's mother, Diana Levesque, is a church soloist and a trained musical theater performer who would practice everything from hymns to arias while a young Joanna watched, listened, and learned. Eventually, she imitated her mother's vocal range and also the vocal stylings of legends like Ella Fitzgerald, Whitney Houston, Etta James, and Aretha Franklin. Eager to perform outside her own living room, JoJo convinced her mother to let her audition for CBS-TV's "Kids Say the Darndest Things" when it came to Boston in the late 1990s. She impressed the producers and was given a slot on the program. When the show's host, Bill Cosby, asked her to sing something, JoJo offered up the Aretha Franklin anthem, "Respect," which won her a standing ovation from the packed Faneuil Hall audience. An invitation to appear on "Oprah" soon followed.

"I've always been singing. I can remember as far back as when I was two years old, I would sing nursery rhymes and I would do riffs on them that would make them jazzy and more R&B. When it comes to performing, I don't remember ever having any fear."

JoJo is the first to admit that her life is not that of an ordinary teenager.

"I remember going to my first KISS Concert at the Tweeter Center eight years ago. And last year, I got to perform at the same show. It was wild. The whole thing was just very cool."

Having spent more than half her life in show business, JoJo knows how to remain cool even when she's working with an Academy Award-winning actor.

"In 'RV,' I played Robin Williams's daughter, which was a great opportunity for me. Robin is such an incredible person and he was great to work with. I'm really good friends with his daughter, too," says JoJo, who also co-starred with Emma Roberts and Sara Paxton in the 2006 release "Aquamarine." While she continues to read movie scripts, JoJo turned down the title role in the Disney Channel's "Hannah Montana" series, preferring to concentrate on her singing career.

"Music is just something I have to do daily. It sounds cheesy, but music is my life."

JoJo will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on Wednesday, July 18. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787, or go online at themusiccircus.org. JoJo will also be at the Cape Cod Melody Tent, 21 West Main St., Hyannis, on Sunday, July 22. For tickets, visit the box office, call 508-775-5630 or go online at melodytent.org

A recently planted line of Northern Green arborvitae has created a screening effect for Nick and Debbie Pitaro who didn't use their back deck for almost two summers because neither of them could stand looking out at the new view of the tracks.

Trees help screen train tracks

N. Main Street couple gains greener view

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

For the Pitaros their backyard had always been a sanctuary. A place where Nick Pitaro could tend to his garden or enjoy a summer dinner with his wife, Debbie, on the back deck. It was a quiet backyard abutting a forest full of wildlife.

"We used to have deer. Wild turkeys would come right up to the window and beautiful birds," says Debbie Pitaro. But when the MBTA began restoring the Greenbush tracks directly behind their North Main Street home the wild animals began disappearing. In its place were noise, litter and an "eyesore" of a view, she says. They didn't use their back deck for almost two summers because neither of them could stand looking out at the new view.

Trees Now used a computer program to generate a digital depiction of the site with different tree options.

It became abundantly clear the train was coming despite assurances from a real estate agent 10 years ago that the South Shore commuter rail branch "would never happen," Debbie Pitaro says.

But, even more than the view, Debbie Pitaro says her husband had a health scare last year and she believes it was partly due to the MBTA's construction. She felt they needed to do something to protect their house from the noise, view and pollution generated from the train. The solution revealed itself when Debbie Pitaro saw a television advertisement for Trees Now, a Plainville-based company specializes in planting and transplanting large, mature trees.

Last week the Pitaros had Trees Now remove their old dying trees and install 31 new trees to create a 12-foot screen along the MBTA-installed chain link fence. In a matter of just one week, the Pitaros had a green screen to mitigate rail noise and block the view of the tracks.

"I didn't really know how much it bothered us, even coming down the driveway would get me upset — it was really offensive," says Debbie Pitaro. The property is more feel away from the warning signal pole, which will have red flashing lights once the train is fully operational.

For weeks the Pitaros worked with the Jerry Ouellette, manager at Trees Now, to determine the best combination of trees to suit their needs.

Church signage

Board's thoughts all over the map

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

More than 20 years ago, the set designers for the "Witches of Eastwick" constructed a black and white sign to be placed at the entrance of Cohasset's historic Meeting House on the Town Common. The First Parish Church adopted the 3-1/2 foot high sign when the Hollywood film crew vacated Cohasset. Now, the First Parish Church would like to change the sign to a more appropriate location and to a more effective size.

"I don't want to look at a sign as I drive up and down the street."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

Parish member Woody Chittick came before the Board of Selectmen on Monday night to convey the church's thoughts. The Meeting House sits on town-owned land, which Chittick felt necessitated Selectmen approval for the sign change. First Parish has already received approval from the Common Historic District Commission.

Chittick explained the parish board had two major problems with the sign. First, the sign is in a poor location to be read and viewed from passersby on North Main St. and William Long Road. The sign is located just 42 inches from the side of the building, parallel to the street and the wall of the building. The location makes the contents of the sign hard to read; "the sign kind of disappears" into its surroundings, said Chittick.

Second, the existing signs display area is very small, only 5.4 square feet of display space. The total square footage is 10.5 square feet. Chittick went around to all seven of the town's churches to compare signs and the First Parish's sign had the smallest on all counts.

"There's no sign that cries out this is a

Cohasset family devoted to cancer research cause

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The closest the Pan Mass Challenge route will come to Cohasset is Lakeville and Wareham, but for many its cause — cancer research — is very close to home. For the Vitello family, raising money for cancer research is a family affair. Peter Vitello will bike ride in the PMC for the eighth time this year, while Jacqui Vitello is an organizer for the Relay For Life. Their two children, eight-year-old Amanda and three-year-old Peter, support their parents along the way.

"We want to do what we can, while we can," says Peter Vitello of his family's involvement. "we're glad we are capable of raising money and awareness."

Both have seen the devastating effects of cancer. Jacqui's father, Robert Goyette, lost his battle with bladder cancer in 1998. While Peter's mother, Mac, is a two-time cancer survivor. Seeing cancer in their families propelled them to join the fight to eradicate the disease. In his eight years participating in the PMC, Peter has raised close to $20,000. Peter will tackle the course alongside his brother Paul. This will be Paul's ninth PMC bike ride.

The PMC is the largest athletic fundraising event in the nation, on Aug. 4 and 5 more than 5,000 riders will take to the streets of eastern Massachusetts on nine different routes. The money raised by the individual riders will benefit the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and the Jimmy Fund. It is one of the most efficient fundraisers with 99 cents of every dollar pledged going to cancer research.

"Every penny counts, anything people can give makes a difference," says Jacqui.

The Vitellos want to make sure their children understand why their parents are so involved with the Relay For Life

Mixed-use TOD gearing up

Permit process could begin next month

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

They are proposing a mixed-use development with over 32,000 square feet of retail/commercial space on the first floors and 13 rental units on the second floor.

Cohasset's first and likely only Transit Oriented District, or TOD, could be going before the Planning Board begin its formal permitting process as early as next month. A vibrant cluster of restaurants, shops and apartments could replace the currently barren site off Route 3A adjacent to the new MBTA station within the next year.

"The boats are gone, the buildings are gone and with apologies to those who cared, MaryLou's is gone," said Geoffrey Wolf to open the informal presentation. Wolf is the Senior Vice President for New Jersey-based Connell Real Estate & Development Co., whose affiliate Connell Cohasset Greenbush LLC now owns and will develop the five-acre property.

The developers plan to file formally with the town in the next two weeks to begin the site plan review and special permit process. They are proposing a mixed-use development with more than 32,000 square feet of retail/commercial space on the first floors and 13 rental units on the second floor. None of the retail spaces have been tenanted yet.

For the past 18 months since acquiring the site, Connell has been working to clean up the site, from demolition to minor oil spill remediation. The property, once home to a boatyard, a small strip mall and a florist/greenery, is now a flat wasteland waiting to be built on. If not for the permitting process, Wolf said the company was more or less ready to break ground tomorrow.

The Connell developers have gone to "great pains" to have the plans 100 percent compliant with the town's TOD zoning bylaws enacted by the town at the 2006 Annual Town Meeting. With that in mind, they hope to avoid a trip to the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The architecture of the development was described as having a "village flavor" and a "Main Street USA feel" to it. The anchor of the development will be a clock tower and other high points of the building will have cupolas.

"To me, it feels a bit more like Virginia than New England," said Planning Board member Mike Westcott of the architecture, but the developers did not agree.

The second floor apartments will be rental units, with a monthly rental between $1200 and $1700. Eight of the apartments will be two-bedrooms, while five will be one-bedrooms. The apartments will likely be "a little oversize" due to design restrictions, said Wolf.

Already one of the chief concerns of the Planning Board is the traffic implication for the TOD development. As it stands now, the shopping development will have a separate entrance than the MBTA parking lot.

"I really hoped you would be tying into the T driveway," said member Stuart Ivimey. Wolf explained the engineering of the driveway made tying in impossible; a pocket of wetlands complicated the designs. A driveway connection between the TOD and the parking lot will be established. The MBTA parking lot entrance will be a signaled intersection, while the TOD entrance will not be. This issue will no doubt be well vetted in the public hearing process.

If the permitting process goes well, Connell developers hope to begin moving dirt on the site before the winter frost sets in (around November) and be open for business within a year, said Wolf. With the MBTA scheduled to begin regular commuter service sometime this fall, the developers would like to be "up and running as quickly as possible," said Wolf.

New poles, lights near MBTA station

National Grid will own the poles and lights and the town will be paying the electric bill.

Five new poles for additional lighting will be constructed on North Main Street in conjunction with the MBTA station. The Board of Selectmen conditionally approved a revised petition from Mass Electric pending additional details on the lighting.

National Grid will own the poles and lights and the town will be paying the electric bill. The purpose of the new lights is to illuminate the new islands near the train tracks. The lights will have a downward focus.

The Selectmen's particular concern regarding new light fixtures is they are currently considering a purchase of street lights from National Grid as a possible money-saving venture.

Vice Chairman Ted Carr requested Mass Electric provide an approximate radius for the lights' glow, indicating five lights may be too many.

The representative from Mass Electric agreed to work with Greenbush liason, Mark Brennan, to pin down the radius and wattage to be used for the street lights.

POLICE BEAT

Car swerves and flips on side

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There were no apparent injuries after a car traveling southbound on Route 3A swerved to avoid a collision and flipped onto its passenger side, police said. The accident occurred at about 6:10 a.m. on Monday (July 16) near the entrance to Golden Living (former Cohasset Knoll).

Police Chief James Hussey said the 2005 Toyota swerved to avoid a 2000 Infinity that was exiting out of the driveway. However, the vehicles collided and after contact, the Toyota rolled up on its side.

The operator of the Infinity was cited for failure to yield to oncoming traffic, Hussey said. Both vehicles were towed and no one was hurt, he said.

Avoiding animal

At about 1:50 a.m. on Friday (July 20) a 2003 Toyota was heading west bound on Atlantic Avenue when an animal ran in front of the vehicle, the driver swerved to avoid the animal and hit a pole, Chief Hussey said. There was no injury to the driver, who had just gotten off work, and no determination that speed was involved. Police did make note that the road surface was wet, Hussey said. National Grid was notified about damage to the pole.

Mini-bikes

There were two complaints about mini-bikes in the log over the past week, although one incident did not in fact involve bikes but four-wheelers.

In the first incident, police received a complaint about a youth on a mini-bike riding up and down Doane Street. The caller stated it was too noisy and wanted it to stop.

Mini-bikes are motorized bicycles whose engines are less than 50 cubic centimeters in size, Chief Hussey said. Operating a motorized bike on a public way is allowed if the operator has a learner's permit or driver's license and is wearing a helmet. If there is a passenger, he or she also must be wearing a helmet. Motorized bikes cannot travel on bicycle paths and must follow the rules of the road. Violators can be subject to a $25 fine that increases with each subsequent offense.

Even if a mini-biker is following the rules, police can ask him or her to stop if the noise is unreasonable and at a time of day (such as bed time) where there is an expectation of peace and quiet.

Go-karts, however, are not allowed on public ways and are not considered a motorized bike.

Police received a complaint last Friday about four-wheelers going up and down the street in the area of Beechwood Street and Mill Lane. The officer spoke to the boys, who when he arrived were working on the vehicles, and explained they cannot be operated on a public way. There have been no further problems, Chief Hussey said.

Suspended registration

At about 12:30 p.m. on Saturday (July 21), an officer on radar patrol near Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road clocked a vehicle going 12 miles over the 30 mph speed limit. The officer, who could not go after the vehicle because someone had stopped to ask for directions, ran the plate number and the computer revealed the car was unregistered. The owner of the vehicle, who lives in Whitman, will be summonsed to court for allowing an unregistered motor vehicle to be driven. It was not clear if he was driving when radar clocked the car as speeding, police said.

Side mirror damaged

Police think a motorist hit the side mirror to a car parked in the Swim Center lot. Police do not think it was done intentionally because if a vandal had smashed it, the glass would have been more severely broken. There were "spider-like" cracks in the mirror. "It looks like someone hit the mirror when trying to pull out and did not make themselves known," Chief Hussey said. The mother of a lifeguard reported the incident at 2:45 p.m. on Monday (July 16) after her daughter returned home with the car.

Chief Hussey urged motorists to leave a note if they damage another vehicle and the operator is not around.

Rock incident

In a confusing log entry, a caller reported that grass and leaves were being dumped illegally. An officer stopped the 1998 black pickup truck on South Main Street and further investigation revealed that the truck had not dumped any grass or leaves but the operator did take a number of rocks from the property.

The truck driver said he had permission to do so, but the person at the property off Beechwood Street could not confirm that and did not want to press charges. The incident occurred last Tuesday (July 17) at about 1:30 p.m.

Trash dumping

The owner of a business on Ripley Road told police that someone had illegally used his dumpster. The owner of the trash was identified through items in the trash and it turned out it was his son who threw the trash into the dumpster.

The business owner did not wish to press charges. Chief Hussey explained that illegally dumping trash into or onto someone else's property can be a criminal charge.

The dumpster owner was asked to keep his dumpster covered, Hussey said. The incident was reported at about 2 p.m. on Thursday (July 19).

Kayak mishap

An overturned two-person kayak off Jerusalem Road turned out to be a minor incident. The two kayakers were able to right their kayak, get back in and were never in any distress, police said. A caller reported the overturned kayak at about 6:50 p.m. on Wednesday (July 18).

Affordable housing plan moves forward

Three units possible on Jerusalem Road

By Nancy White

The Housing Partnership Committee has received approval from the Board of Selectmen to move forward with its plan for three affordable housing units on a town owned property at 821 Jerusalem Road.

A small step in a big job was made on Monday night. The Housing Partnership Committee has received approval from the Board of Selectmen to move forward with its plan for three affordable housing units on a town owned property on Jerusalem Road.

Back in April, the Housing Partnership came to the Selectmen asking them to hold off on taking any action in regard to the property; the Selectmen agreed. Chairman Tom Callahan wrote to the Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) to find out if it would deem the proposed units affordable and allow them to count toward Cohasset's affordable housing stock.

Callahan reported the DHCD has given him verbal assurances that the three units would count as affordable under the state's 40-B regulation. Currently the house at 821 Jerusalem Road is a two-family house. The Housing Partnership would like to see the house re-configured to a three-unit building.

"Because of land acquisition cost, this [type of project] is very difficult," said Callahan, "it's a positive opportunity and we should take it while its here."

The Town currently owns the piece of property at 821 Jerusalem Road and the Selectmen had a number of options for it besides developing affordable housing. The town foreclosed on the property in May 2005 due to non-payment of property taxes. The property could have been put out to auction or remained in the hands of the town (one tenant is currently paying rent to the town).

In addition, the daughter of the previous owner of the house has offered to pay all the back property taxes in order to keep the house in her family. However, her petition to vacate the final judgment was not received within a year's time of the foreclosure. Her appeal to the Land Court was denied earlier this month, and on Monday night the Selectmen affirmed the court's decision in a 4-0 vote.

"This project is not going to hit a financial home run," said Callahan, but the aim would be for the town to recoup the back taxes on the property, approximately $70,000.

The next step in the process is to issue a Request for Proposals (RFP) to local developers. Parameters would be set for the developers including one two-bedroom apartment, staying roughly within the footprint and establishing a town sewer connection. The Housing Partnership would ensure all permits were in place before selling the building to the developer. The committee plans to get the project approved as a Local Initiative Project (LIP), or "friendly 40-B," by the DHCD. The project would then need approval from Town Meeting.

If the LIP is not approved, Callahan said there is a Plan B. The town could continue to rent the building, sell it or hand over the building to the Housing Authority and seek Community Preservation money to renovate the building.

If all goes well, the project could come to fruition in early 2008.

Callahan also requested the Selectmen to reduce the number of people on the committee from 10 to nine. He reported the committee was having difficulty achieving six members for a quorum, the new structure would require a five-member quorum to conduct business. The Selectmen voted 4-0 to approve the change. (Selectman Fred Koed was not present at the meeting).

Wanted: Red Lion Inn manager

Lapse in management concerns town officials

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Red Lion Inn, an anchor in the Cohasset Village and in its history, is looking for a new manager. To the Board of Selectmen and town officials this is a concern. Since May, the establishment has been without a reliable contact on the liquor license application. In Cohasset, the Board of Selectmen is the liquor license authority. The town communicated to the inn their concerns with the lack of consistent management at the inn, including fire safety issues brought up by fire officials.

Michael Hayes, attorney representing the Red Lion Inn, came before the Selectmen on Monday to convey the Inn's point of view.

"I understand the town's frustration at the lack of identifiable leadership," said Hayes, "it is the nature of the business and of the Red Lion Inn that there is lots of change."

Fire Chief Robert Silvia and Fire Inspector Capt. Mark Trask have relayed concerns to Town Manager Bill Griffin over a series of fire alarm and related incidents at the establishment. Hayes agreed to have a meeting with the fire officials at the earliest convenience.

The Red Lion Inn had applied for a liquor license change of manager with the public hearing scheduled for Monday night. However, late last week Griffin was informed the proposed manager had decided to take another position. Hayes said the proposed manager has a "meltdown in the kitchen" on his first busy night and quit. Another short-lived manager held the position before him.

Until a new manager is in place and acclimated to the position, the owner of the Red Lion Inn, Gerd Ordelheide, will be running the day-to-day operations of the Red Lion. He will stay on through the summer, said Hayes.

"I understand the town's frustration at the lack of identifiable leadership."
— Michael Hayes, attorney for Red Lion Inn

"We're trying to stay on top of this," and expect to have a new manager in place in the next two weeks, Hayes said.

Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer suggested the Inn "take the time to find someone new" and not rush to find a replacement so quickly. Griffin advised Hayes to find a top internal candidate to fulfill managerial duties in the future, in case a lapse in management occurs again.

"We need someone to hang around and do a good job," said Hayes. He will keep Griffin apprised of the situation and will come before the Board for the liquor license application once a new manager is in place.

Selectmen endorse wind turbine legislation

The Alternative Energy Committee is actively looking at wind turbines as a source of energy for town buildings. They are currently collecting wind data from a 165-foot MET tower on Turkey Hill and are drafting a zoning bylaw for wind turbines for fall Town Meeting.

In its research it has discovered towns without municipal light companies are at a disadvantage when it come to excess energy. Towns with municipal light companies are able to sell excess energy generated back to National Grid for a profit. For towns without municipal light companies, like Cohasset, electricity generated but not used on sit is bought by the National Grid for one rate then sold back to the Town for a higher rate.

The billing would allow a meter to read both ways, so when more energy is put into the grid than taken out; a credit is given to the Town.

To alleviate the problem, there is a "net metering bill" proposed in the state Senate. The billing would allow a meter to read both ways, so when more energy is put into the grid than taken out; a credit is given to the Town. Conversely, if more energy is taken out than is put into the grid, the Town is billed.

The Board of Selectmen voted 4-0 (Selectman Fred Koed was not present) to write to state legislators endorsing the proposed legislation.

LAZY, HAZY DAYS

Hello Cohasset. Ahhh, the hazy, lazy days of summer are here. A bit humid, some rain this weekend and back to normal for next week. Send in all of your summer news, events and photos and let us all here what types of things are happening.

NEW ARRIVAL

David Ames and his wife Tanya have welcomed a bouncing baby boy into their family!

Wyllys Lincoln Ames arrived at precisely 1:19 p.m. on June 20 at South Shore Hospital. He weighed in at a hefty 11 pounds, 12 ounces and measured 22-1/2 inches in length.

Available for lots of extra hugs are grandparents August Rettkowski and Janice Gillissen of Byfield, Mass. and Aubin and Lincoln Ames of Montclair, N.J.

David, Tanya and Wyllys live in Scituate. David is a science teacher at Cohasset High and helped lead the student effort to build the CO2 cube this past spring!

GENEROUS GIFT

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library would like to thank Sunrise Assisted Living Center for its generous gift of $300. The money was raised at Sunrise's recent yard sale and will help fund the library's outreach program. One service provided under the outreach program is delivering library materials to homebound residents. The money raised will also go towards purchasing favorite titles on audiobook and large print.

IN THE PMC

Dan Williams, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, completed the Plymouth Police Academy in June and was appointed as a Permanent Intermittent Police Officer to begin working in early July. As well, Dan was accepted into Suffolk University Law School, and this Fall he will begin his legal studies. Both are important to him in building a broad and deep background in criminal law. He has been on bicycle patrol in town, and is an avid bicycle rider who will be bicycling with his friend and next-door neighbor Will Prendergast to raise money for cancer research and treatment. He must raise $3000 to ride the 200-mile run. Anyone interested in donating to this to help him reach this goal can contribute online at pmc.org/egifts, or gifts may be mailed to 217 North Main St., made out to PMC.

COLGATE GRAD

Lindsay R. Grossman, daughter of Jeffrey R. Grossman and Christina F. Grossman and Kathleen Prevett and James Prevett, was awarded a bachelor of arts by Colgate University Sunday, May 20. Lindsay majored in environmental geography and was also a member of the women's varsity tennis team. Congratulations on this news and good luck with all your future endeavors.

35TH REUNION

Here is some information for all CHS graduates of 1972. Cohasset High School Class of 1972 is planning a reunion for Oct. 26, 2007. More information is available at www.Classmates.com and will be updated regularly. Organizers are trying to locate classmates. Please log on to the Classmates web site and become a member so that you can be reached and received notice of updates . You can also contact: www.Tessahoc72@yahoo.com. If you are a friend or family member of a CHS 72 graduate who is out of the area, please pass this on.

COLLEGE NEWS

We have a number of Cohasset residents who have named to various college dean's lists, graduated recently or otherwise been recognized. Fantastic work to all of them who are listed here as well as to all the students who are not.

Matthew Joseph Davis was named to the dean's list at Ursinus College for the spring 2007 semester and is a member of the Class of 2007. Matthew majored in biology. Super news.

The following students were named to the University of Massachusetts Boston Dean's List for the Spring, 2007 semester. Congratulations to Katherine Schroeder, Abigail Coakley, Patrick Reardon, Peter Kovach and Kathryn Hines.

This list of students are from Connecticut College and were also named to the dean's list for the 2007 Spring semester. Thomas N. Anderson, class of 2007 and Ashley M. Faber, class of 2008 were named to the dean's list with a grade point average of 3.3 or higher and Scott D. Faber, class of 2007 achieved dean's high honors with a grade point average of 3.7-4.0. Amazing work to you all.

READ TO RIDE

Christa Hagearty, President of Dependable Cleaners, announced recent winners in the Read to Ride summer reading incentive program. One of this week's contest winners is 12-year-old Anya Gruber of Cohasset. Anya will be entering the eighth grade at Cohasset Middle School this fall. Her winning entry form was for reading "The Fairies of Nutfolk Wood" by Barb Bentler Ullman.

Read to Ride is a summer tradition in the Gruber family. Last summer, Anya's sister Sarah won a new bike, which she in turn donated to the Boys & Girls Club of Allston-Brighton. Anya loves to read and visits the library at least once a week. She is a regular participant in the program and is very excited that she won. "Read to Ride is a great program," her mother Elizabeth said. "The prospect of winning a bike is certainly very exciting, and my kids look forward to the contest every summer."

TEAM HAS PIZAZZ!

Cohasset's Kara Protulis is a member of Pizazz, a newly-formed adult theatre on ice skating team, which meets at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham and is off to a great start, having won silver medals in the Choreographic Exercise short program and the Theatre On Ice short program at the 2007 International Theatre On Ice championships held recently at the John Gallo Rink in Bourne.

Coached by Marcia Breen-Roussos of Norwell and John Mucko of Quincy, the team was critiqued by judges from thirteen states, plus France. Twenty-six teams competed in five levels, with programs encompassing jazz, ballet, adagio, free style, ice dance and acting.

Thousands of spectators attended the championships and were wildly enthusiastic. Theatre On Ice is the wave of the future for figure skating and is growing so rapidly that there are presently 50 known teams competing with many more starting up.

NEW SHOW

The train is coming! To get the latest updates be sure to watch Our Town starting Monday when Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo sit down with Greenbush liaison Tom Gruber and talk about train safety, train work and when the train might actually be starting. The show airs on Channel 10. See page 11 for more details.

That is all for this week. Send me your news no later than Tuesdays by 5 pm.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by Cohasset Historical Society.

It has been quite a while since the Town of Cohasset saw a move as huge as this one. The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum, also known as the Bates Ship Chandlery, was once located at the harbor on Border Street. Built in the mid-1750s by Samuel Bates, it served as a company store and counting house for the Bates fishing business until John Bates died in 1882. Financier Clarence W. Barron purchased the chandlery in 1912 and his daughter, Jessie Cox and her husband, William Cox donated the building to the Historical Society in 1954. Two years later it was moved to its present location on Elm Street.

Currently undergoing a restoration, the Maritime is open for visitors Tuesday through Friday from 1 to 4:30 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Stop by before the museum closes at the end of September. From ship's models to salvaged objects from shipwrecks off the Cohasset coast, and even a legendary ghost, you never know what you'll see at the Maritime Museum.

Stop by and visit the Capt. John Wilson House and Maritime museum in the Village. The museums are open Tuesday through Friday from 1 to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Call 781-383-1434 for more information about the Cohasset Historical Society.

First Parish Church would like to change the orientation of its sign and make it larger, but no taller. The issue came before the Board of Selectmen on Monday night.

Selectmen not of common mind on church sign church," said Chittick, indicating anecdotal evidence newcomers to the town have a difficult time discerning the building is a church, rather than a meeting house or historic building.

The proposed sign change would re-orient the sign 90 degrees to face oncoming traffic and move the sign away from the building to be better seen. The proposed sign would remain five feet tall, but be enlarged laterally, from three feet to approximately six feet.

If the new sign is approved the First Parish Church would include the names of the minister and education director, in addition to as well as the church name, religious affiliation and service times. The color scheme would remain a black background with white lettering, to match the meeting house architecture.

Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer was unsure if the proposed signage was the best solution, he suggested something small be done in addition to the current sign, like the small sign at the First Parish House across the street.

"I don't want to look at a sign as I drive up and down the street," Dormitzer said.

Chairman Gary Vanderweil put the church in the "big picture." The Meeting House and the town common is one of Cohasset's best known locations, he said, and did not think the sign was subtle enough.

"This is a monstrosity," said Vanderweil.

Chittick said the proposal was what the Parish would prefer but "it was not an all or nothing thing." Multiple options were offered in addition to the proposal. Selectman Paul Carlson suggested the orientation remain the same, while the sign was moved closer to the street. Selectmen Ted Carr said he would vote for the switch in orientation with a similar look and size of the current sign. With so many differing ideas and Selectman Fred Koed absent from the meeting, the Selectmen decided to postpone their decision on the sign.

"Let's wait for a full house," said Vanderweil. The sign will be discussed again at the next meeting of the Board of Selectmen. The Selectmen would need to approve or deny the proposed plan, if any changes were made the revised plan would have to go back to the Common Historic District for approval. Then the First Parish Church would seek zoning relief from sign bylaws from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

and the PMC. Amanda, now eight years old, has been coming to the Relay and the PMC practically her whole life.

"When we were growing up we were never exposed to [these type of events], now there's such an awareness," says Jacqui, who has been involved with the Relay for 10 years and each year the kids come along, "when our children are our age, I want there to be no such thing as cancer."

The grueling 192-mile bike ride, split over two days, travels from Sturbridge to Provincetown, with an overnight stay at Mass Maritime Academy in Bourne. The course is broken up with water stops every 20 miles. Jacqui and the kids will go out and meet Peter along the route. They travel from water stop to water stop to cheer him on. The kids make t-shirts to show their support.

The water stops manned by volunteers, many are cancer survivors, make an impression on Peter every year.

"They remind me why I'm doing this and make me keep going. It's for the people who have suffered or are suffering, I do it for them," explains Peter, "everyone there has something in common, cancer unfortunately touches everybody."

The strenuous journey takes a toll on the bikers, Peter tries to keep his suffering in perspective, "sore muscles go away but a lot of times cancer doesn't."

"The [volunteers] give you so much support, you run into different people, you share stories, it's tough to put [the experience] into words," says Peter, whose parents will be volunteering at the Bourne site for the fifth year in a row.

"The sheer number of volunteers and their willingness to do anything is inspiring, many of them had a harder task than the riders," says another Cohasset resident, Bill Doyle, who will be participating in his second PMC. Last year, he biked the one-day version of the course, but this year he wanted to do more. His goal is to raise $7000, for a two-year total of $10,000. He bikes in tribute to his aunt, a breast cancer survivor.

Both Peter Vitello and Doyle have been amazed with the generosity and support from friends, family and the community.

"We're so close to a cure now, the PMC's slogan 'closer by the mile' really is true," says Peter.

If you would like to donate to Peter Vitello or Bill Doyle's Pan-Mass Challenge bike ride to benefit the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute through its Jimmy Fund, visit www.pmc.org.

Cohasset residents to ride in Pan-Massachusetts Challenge

Nine Cohasset residents will ride in the Pan-Massachusetts Challenge, the nation's original bike-a-thon for charity that today raises more money than any other athletic fundraising event in the country. The ride will take place Aug. 4 and 5. Cohasset riders will be among the more than 5,000 cyclists riding in the 28th annual event with the collective goal of raising $27 million for adult and pediatric cancer research and care at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute through its Jimmy Fund.

The PMC has contributed more than $171 million to the Jimmy Fund since its 1980 inception. Last year, the PMC gave 99 cents of every rider-raised dollar directly to the Jimmy Fund, a rate of fundraising efficiency that is nearly unequaled within the $1 billion athletic fundraising event industry. The PMC is the largest contributor to Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's $1 billion capital campaign.

Pan-Massachusetts Challenge is a fully supported bike-a-thon – with food and water stops, mechanical and medical assistance, luggage transportation and lodging – that runs through 43 towns across Massachusetts. Two-day rides include the original 192-mile Sturbridge to Provincetown route; 180-mile Sturbridge-Bourne-Wellesley route; 163-mile Wellesley-Bourne-Provincetown route; or the 153-mile Wellesley-Bourne-Wellesley route. One-day riders cycle the 111-mile Sturbridge-Bourne route; the 84-mile Wellesley-Bourne route; the 69-mile Bourne-Wellesley Sunday volunteer route; or the new 47-mile Wellesley-Wellesley Sunday loop. Cyclists are required to raise between $1,000 and $3,600 to ride in the PMC, depending on the chosen route, yet the average PMC cyclist raises $5,500.

The PMC is sponsored by the Boston Red Sox, Overstock.com and Covidien. To become a volunteer, a virtual rider or make a financial contribution to a rider from a local town, visit pmc.org or call 800-WE-CYCLE. Checks can be made payable to PMC, 77 Fourth Ave., Needham, MA 02494.

Cohasset riders include: Kelly Antonuccio, Dan Counihan, William Doyle, Lorraine Healy, Mark Healy, Susan McMackin, William Prendergast, Peter Vitello and Daniel Williams.

Author Valerie Block to speak at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys welcomes novelist Valerie Block at 7 p.m., on Thursday, Aug. 2, at Buttonwood, Shaw's Plaza, Route 3A, Cohasset. Block will discuss her book, "Don't Make A Scene," her novel about life, love and the movies.

Diane Kurasik is a relatively happy 39-year-old single woman living in New York City. However, happy and content are momentary stages in life. As she is pondering the predictability of her work and wondering if she needs something more challenging, an eviction notice arrives in her mailbox. Upheaval, like the muses, never arrives alone. Housing, work, family and romance all demand equal attention. Her life, which was a one-act play, has evolved into a full movie. "Don't Make a Scene" is a witty, lighthearted story filled with laugh out loud moments.

This is a free event and refreshments will be served. Anyone who is unable to attend and would like to order a signed copy can call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665.

Jerry Ouellette, right, shown here with Nick Destito, left, both of Trees Now, used a computer program to generate a digital depiction of the Pitaros' North Main Street backyard with different tree options. "The main goal was to create a noise mitigation and screening effect so [the Pitaros] didn't have to look at the berm eyesore," says Ouellette.

they need to do," says Ouellette. Ouellette listened the Pitaros' concerns and desires to come up with the best solution. He shared his knowledge of trees and plantings, showed them other similar type screenings the company had done.

"Homeowners typically have a myopic understanding of trees," and Ouellette. Trees Now can guide them through the endless forest of options, "trees can really change the character of a home."

Trees Now used a computer program to generate a digital depiction of the site with different tree options. Together, the Pitaros and Ouellette determined the Northern Green arborvitae would work best for their situation, 27 were planted along the property edge.

"The main goal was to create a noise mitigation and screening effect so [the Pitaros] didn't have to look at the berm eyesore," says Ouellette, "the arborvitae has thick branches that overlap to provide a strong matting."

The arborvitae is compact too, so the trees could be planted almost directly next to the fencing. Right now, they stand about 12 feet but will grown almost double in size to about 20 to 25 feet in height.

"You won't even be able to see the double decker train when that starts going through," says Nick Destito, owner of Trees Now. A Colorado blue spruce and a white pine were planted to add to the texture of the screen. Several plants and trees were moved from other parts of the yard and re-planted.

"If you add trees to your home, you add value to your home forever," says Ouellette.

Trees Now has been in business for more than 20 years. Originally, Destito ran a complete tree service business, where his company (Destito Trees) would remove, install, and transplant trees. But when the equipment and insurance became too much, he decided to branch off and establish a niche company after 10 years in complete tree service. Trees Now has sub-contractors to remove the trees and focuses on design, installation and transplant of mature trees. They buy and sell trees and have several of their own tree farms where they can pick and choose specimen trees for their clients.

Destito and Ouellette have already received several calls from other train abutters interested in doing similar projects in their backyards bordering the train tracks.

"The best thing is coming in the driveway and not seeing that horror show," says Debbie Pitaro, who calls herself a happy customer, "it really makes a difference, even if you have to get a second mortgage, it's worth it."

"It's so nice to be seeing green instead of track," seconds Nick Pitaro.

Legion seeking donations for those deployed

The George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 is seeking donations of toiletries and other items for those deployed to Iraq and Afghanistan. Donations may be dropped off at the Legion Post on Summer Street daily after 3 p.m. or at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank branches on 3A or in the village.

Monetary donations are also accepted. Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with "Soldiers Project" written in the memo line on the check. Checks can be mailed to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. The following items are being collected at the American Legion for deployed servicemen and women:

Batteries - AA and AAA, razors, mouthwash, Chapstick, nuts, shaving cream Ziploc bags of all sizes, hand warmers, baby wipes, pens and notepaper, Pringles, toothbrushes, toothpaste and floss.

Also, sports magazines, local newspapers, socks, T-shirts, candy (no chocolate), phone cards, peanut butter and crackers, dry tuna in a bag, deodorant, winter hats and gloves, gum, mints, Lifesavers, Q-Tips, sunscreen, soap and body wash, dry soup, beef jerky, Tylenol, Advil, Excedrin and cameras.

Also, athlete's foot cream or spray, bandanas, socks, Bounce dryer sheets, chap sticks, ground coffee, CoffeeMate, antibiotic cream, duct tape, used CD or DVD's, paperbacks, knee-hi hose, cologne, Band-Aids, a variety of shoe inserts, playing cards, black pens, writing pads, envelopes, puzzle magazines, flea collars, lens cleaner for glasses, Ramen noodles in the cup, breakfast bars, gum, single-serve packets hot chocolate or soup, Pringles, hard candy, and microwave popcorn. Personal notes or cards are encouraged.

OPINION

Uncommon request

In a world where signs constantly compete to get our attention – it is refreshing that in Cohasset, a church sign on the historic Town Common would be at topic before the Board of Selectmen.

Indeed, our culture is completely sign-oriented whether that be telling us where and how long to park, or letting the public know what sports team we support by advertising that on our baseball caps or T-shirts. Often before children can talk, they recognize advertising symbols such as the "Golden Arches" or the Target bull's eye.

Cohasset is no stranger to signs. They are all over the place. Take a walk through the village and check out all the messages we are being sent!

Along Route 3A, it is even more evident. In fact, to compete, organizations such as the South Shore Arts Center or Cohasset Dramatic Club will install temporary signs at a key spot such as Sohier Street and Route 3A to make sure motorists' eyes are drawn there and people know about the Festival on the Common or latest CDC production.

It is all part of the American way.

But Cohasset Common, which is at the heart of the local Cohasset Common Historic District, is an oasis from all that. It is not only pristine but represents a simpler time. In the center of the Common stands — what, we believe, is one of the most beautiful churches in all New England — the First Parish meetinghouse.

The Common is also a busy place. It hosts the Village Fair, Farmer's Market and the Festival on the Common, as well as being the site of pickup football matches or a game of catch, or a place where one can sit and reflect by the pond. However, those activities don't detract but add to the sense that the Common is part of Cohasset and belongs to us all.

Therefore, while to an outsider discussion about a church sign might seem trivial, in Cohasset it shows how town officials and the members of First Parish fully understand the value of Cohasset Common.

Common "signs" have come up before and can be a good thing. Years ago, a local resident proposed signs that were installed on backs of the benches at the pond that explain why people should not feed the ducks. He was propelled into action after seeing a rare bird that had decided not to migrate for the winter given the ample amount of bread being provided.

First Parish wants to change the orientation of its existing sign, which is just 42 inches from the church, parallel to the street and side of the building, and make the sign larger but no taller.

We applaud First Parish for bringing the matter of a new church sign before the Board of Selectmen on Monday where our Selectmen gave the proposal "mixed reviews." Selectmen postponed their decision and took the issue under advisement.

Here at the Mariner, we do not have an opinion on the appropriateness of the sign but we are happy town and church officials understand changes to the look of the Town Common are weighty matters.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'An environmental disaster'

TO THE EDITOR:

It is well recognized that Treat's Pond is an environmental disaster. It is choked with phragmite, has high readings for enterococci bacteria, is a breeding ground for mosquitoes, is a fire hazard when the phragmite turns to straw in the fall and is inadequate as storage for storm water runoff, with the result that homes along Atlantic Avenue are regularly flooded during rain events.

The Army Corps of Engineers has proposed a major remediation of the pond by restoring its tidal connection to the ocean and creating two-way flow — salt water into the pond and fresh water out. The benefits of this proposal will be a reduction in the phragmite now choking the pond, near elimination of the bacterial pollution, elimination of the mosquito habitat, reduction in fire hazard, improved flood control for Atlantic Avenue and restoration of the pond as an estuarine habitat for shellfish, finfish and waterfowl.

The Corps has thoroughly researched this proposal with detailed studies of tidal flow rates; water quality effects, including potential bacteria counts in dry and wet weather; pond and tidal elevations; impacts on tidal waters; and mean pond elevations based on tidal variation.

The Federal Government will provide 65 percent of the funding for the project, with the remainder to be raised locally through State grants or appropriations and Town funding. The probable Town percentage is in the range of 10 to 20 percent of the total estimated cost of $1,620,000.

The question has been raised as to whether or not Treat's Pond was ever a salt marsh. It is clear from the evidence that it was. The US Coast Guard maps of 1853 for this area and other charts as well show the connection between inner Sandy Cove and Treat's Pond. Moreover, high tides were and are four to five feet above the ground elevation of the pond. It doesn't take a degree in physics to appreciate that this differential would result in a substantial flow of salt water into the pond.

Two good examples of this phenomenon are the flow at high tide into Little Harbor under Cunningham Bridge and the flow into the Gulf River under Mill Bridge. The phragmite invasion is a relatively new phenomenon, and anecdotal evidence supports the conclusion that the pond was once free of phragmite and was a successful estuarine habitat. A good example of a successful habitat is the pocket marsh at the beginning of Atlantic Avenue opposite Howard Gleason Road. Saltwater invades the marsh at high tides, cleaning the marsh while keeping the phragmite at bay, and the marsh grasses act as a natural rain garden for storm runoff. We would expect the same results from a restored Treat's Pond, with the additional benefit of reduced flooding of homes during storm events.

The appropriation for the Federal share of the project is supported by the Army Corps and by our representatives in Congress. Our Legislative representatives support the State share. We are optimistic that the Town of Cohasset will support its share of this highly worthwhile project. We look forward to support from the people of Cohasset.

A taxpayer's 'Treat' indeed

COMMENTARY

MARTIN NEE

In my view, the flooding at Treats Pond is identical to the situation now impacting areas surrounding James Brook, Jacobs Meadow, Deep Run, Straits Pond and others.

I live along a drainage cut that feeds Treats Pond, so I was delighted to see a commentary in last week's Mariner attempting to shed "sunlight" and full public "transparency and scrutiny" on the Treats Pond issue. While I disagree with the solution that was proposed, I think closer public scrutiny will reveal the complexities of the problem at hand and lead to more effective and innovative solutions than what was proposed. Throughout the entire Town of Cohasset, serious, chronic and recurrent flooding and water pollution problems are damaging homes and posing public health threats — and the Treats Pond situation is a prime example.

In my view, the flooding at Treats Pond is identical to the situation now impacting areas surrounding James Brook, Jacobs Meadow, Deep Run, Straits Pond and others. The culprit in each case has been decades of building roads, driveways, sidewalks and rooftop structures, combined with the clearing of wooded areas without appropriately controlling run-off. When it rains, incredibly large volumes of stormwater run along the surface picking up pollution from antiquated septic systems and other sources without the benefit of the earth's natural filtration system. Eventually the stormwater dumps into the same old drainage systems, which were never designed to handle the surge, and we are left with the unintended and expensive consequences we are facing today.

While the causes of major flooding problems may be identical, effective solutions to them often have their own unique set of challenges. Quick, inexpensive and un-engineered fixes for serious flooding problems like the one presented in the previous commentary, have had a history of failure all over town. And according to environmentalists, habitats destroyed by phragmites like Treats Pond, are not capable of "self-remediating" them-

How water drains from Jacobs Meadow

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Water Department Work – As a public service, we thought that you might like to know the schedule for the current water main construction work being done by Cohasset Water Department. So here it is:

- Beechwood Street: July 5 to Aug. 10
- Bailey Road: Aug. 10 to Sept. 25
- Ridgetop Road: Aug. 10 to Sept. 25
- Arrowwood Street: Aug. 10 to Sept. 25
- Buttonwood Lane; Sept. 11-25
- Lincoln Lane: Sept. 25 to Dec. 2

Final paving will not be started until May 2008. Although delaying the final paving may not seem to make sense, it really is the smart thing to do. Experience shows that spending money now to do the final paving rather than waiting until the ground has a chance to really settle is money wasted. A much better and longer lasting paving job will be obtained if the inevitable settling is allowed to happen. So, there may be a little unevenness in the roads where new water lines have been constructed until final paving next spring.

More on James Brook – Last week we gave you a quick overview of James and Stewart brooks. We showed that the water from these two brooks enters Jacobs Meadow, drains to the harbor and comes from as far, to the Hingham end, as Lower King St. and as far, to the Scituate end, as Castle Road, and possibly beyond. This week, we'd like to talk about how the water drains from Jacobs Meadow out to the harbor.

First, keep in mind that water can only exit to the harbor when the water level in the meadow is higher than the water level in the harbor. Jacobs Meadow drains into an open channel at the Legion Hall and then goes underground in pipes until it gets to the harbor. If you look carefully at this channel, you will be able to see that the walls are in the process of collapsing. And, there is debris in the bottom of the channel. Both of these reduce the amount of storm water that can be released to the harbor as well as reduce the salt water that can be moved back into the meadow.

At the edge of the harbor, just beyond the new Veteran's Memorial is the terminus for three underground outfall pipes. Two of these pipes (48 ins. and 66 ins. in diameter) have flapper gates. So what are flapper gates? Simply put, they are one-way gates. They are big steel flaps with hinges at the top that cover the harbor side of the pipes. When the water in the harbor is low enough, the water from the meadow forces the flaps to open and, presto, water goes from the meadow to the harbor. When the water in the harbor rises they close and no water can flow back into the meadow.

Now, the third pipe, in the center, is terminated in an entirely different way. It has a very special device called a SRT (Self Regulating Tide) gate. In addition to letting water flow from the meadow to the harbor just like the flapper gates, it also lets an adjustable amount of salt water from the harbor back into the meadow. Why would we ever want to do this? Jacobs Meadow is a saltwater meadow. Years ago, the meadow was open to the harbor, so salt water could flow freely up into the meadow to maintain a healthy saltwater meadow environment. Now, the meadow is mostly fresh water so the invasive fresh water plants, particularly phragmites, have taken over. The reintroduction of limited amounts of salt water into the meadow is an attempt to restore the saltwater habitat and reduce the phragmites. For a variety of reasons, which we'll discuss in later articles, this has not been very effective.

If you are still with us, let's talk about what the weaknesses in the present meadow to harbor outfall might be. One of the projects, which have been identified by the Town to improve meadow drain performance, is re-engineering and reconstructing this channel and its flow control mechanisms. This alone could permit about 20 percent more storm water to exit to the harbor when necessary and create the opportunity for a like increase of salt water into Jacobs Meadow for meadow restoration. So why don't we do it? Well, like all major projects it takes money. The Town has applied for a MEMA / FEMA (Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency / Federal Emergency Management Agency) grant under their flood damage mitigation program. We were not awarded a grant in the initial go around, but are still working toward possible later funding.

Forest Avenue – Of the 4,950 feet of Forest Avenue, starting at N. Main Street that will be reclaimed, about 2,400 feet have been completed, as we write this article. (Reclaiming is removing all of the old asphalt down to the road understructure.) By the time you read this a base coat of asphalt should be laid on this first reclaimed portion. As the roadway reclamation and base coat work proceeds, the road should become less of a hazard zone and a bit easier on our vehicles. Around the end of the end of the month all of the reclamation should be finished and the base coat added. About the same time, we should begin cold planning the Northern end of the roadway. (Cold planning is removing only the top surface of the old asphalt to allow a new top coat to be laid without raising the finished road height.)

After the base coat is laid, the curb construction will start, as a prelude to sidewalk construction. The entire project is still on schedule for completion around October, but is still weather dependent. Above all things, as the paving progresses, please remember this is still a work zone. Keep your speed down and stay alert for workmen and other construction hazards.

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

As faithful readers of this column know, I have an almost pathological need to not spend money. When I make an honest ranking of my favorite activities these days, not spending money comes in at number four. It's really flown up the charts since I got married, going from number eight billion to the fourth spot in just under 14 years.

I'll give you an example. I took my seven-year-old daughter to a matinee for her birthday, and as we passed the concessions stand she asked for an enormous bag of Skittles. My normal reaction would have been to double over laughing, but because it was her birthday, and because she had brought $4 of her own money I got her the Skittles.

About half way through the movie I heard the unmistakable sound of 97 Skittles clacking onto the floor beneath her seat. She looked at me in horror, and even in the dark I could tell she was close to tears. So I smiled and told her not to worry, got out of my seat, and crouched down to pick up all the fallen Skittles, rubbing each one on my shirt a bit before carefully placing it back in her bag.

"Good as new," I said, and took my seat again as she resumed her snacking.

A few minutes passed.

"Dad," she whispered, "they gave me an M&M instead of a Skittle."

"Oh yeah?" I said. "I guess that happens sometimes. It's like a little prize."

"They gave me some gum too."

"Hey look at Nancy Drew up there."

"Is this a marble?"

"No more talking now honey. Those ushers carry mace."

I realize that some would call me cheap. I think it's more accurate to say I'm incredibly cheap. Of course if I put half the thought and energy I devote to not spending money into making more money I wouldn't have to not spend so much. But I suppose I'm someone who was brought up to believe that asking for a raise is a little haughty, especially when you spend your work day making personal calls and plotting to sabotage your manager's vacation plans. So instead I buy three gallons of loss-leader milk from Tedeschi's and call it a day.

It's not that I don't like hard work or money itself. I've always had lots of entrepreneurial drive. The problem is that my business sense never evolved beyond the second grade level. Remember when you believed that any odd piece of junk was highly valuable and rare? My daughter fishes rusty bottle caps out of the dirt and takes them home as if they're ancient roman coins. I used to think my collection of various-sized cardboard tubes was my ticket out of the middle class. When that didn't work I tried lemonade stands, hot dog stands — would you buy a hot dog from a grubby-looking boy at the end of his driveway? One saint of a truck driver did. I can only assume he was ravenous from all the amphetamines and regretted his decision 10 or 15 miles down the road.

I wasn't any brighter in college when I ran my own bike tune-up business from my dorm room on weekends. For seven or eight hours that could have been spent studying fluid dynamics I would repack bearings, adjust breaks and shifters, and thoroughly clean all the surfaces of one bike, charging $20 for this service. I think I made a better hourly wage collecting cardboard tubes. Within a month I had people flocking to me to fix up their bikes, so I assumed I had this phenomenal business going. It never occurred to me to do the "revenue minus expenses equals profit" math. Yet on Monday I'd be back programming a computer to find the highest known prime number. Apparently it's 17, by the way.

I've always been an idiot when it comes to making money, so not spending it has become a kind of second career for me. Supposedly this is how old New England families became wealthy, but so far I haven't been as happy with the results. What I have gained is an appreciation for all the good things in life that money can't buy, like a kiss from my daughter, a beautiful sunset, or a perfect skipping stone from Rocky Beach. You know the wicked smooth, flat kind I mean? I can't help wondering how much you could get for a bag of those things.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset. He expects to lose his shirt on another lemonade stand in August, but is optimistic that his '87 Toyota will fetch a pretty penny once it's given antique status in 2012.

Templates are on Mrs. Moody's desk. Winners will be from all age groups. Contest ends Friday, Aug. 3, and winners will be called.

Music Contest – Catch the Beat at Your Library by writing new words to "Yankee Doodle Dandy." The words should reflect how one feels about or how one interprets the Catch the Beat at Your Library program. This contest is open to all students. Leave songs in the contest basket on Mrs. Moody's desk. Winners will be from all age groups. Contest ends Friday, Aug. 3.

Harry Potter

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I wrote a book once --- or, rather, I was part of a team that wrote it.

It was called "The Torch Is Passed," the story of the Kennedy assassination and funeral, and along with Saul Pett, Hugh Mulligan and Sid Moody, I was sequestered in a Manhattan hotel room for the better part of two weeks to get the manuscript to the publisher by Christmas.

We did and I was told it eventually sold four million copies --- by mail order, which kept it off the bestseller lists. And we got a flat fee for writing it, which tells you why I'm not living in Duxbury or Cohasset right now.

I thought four million was a pretty good two week's work until last week when I learned that J. K. Rowling's "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows" had a first printing of 12 million, which went on sale last Saturday at 12:01 a.m. and may have sold out by dawn, for all I know.

If you think you've seen the last of Harry Potter, be advised that there are still two movies to go...

So far the previous six volumes in the Harry Potter series have sold 325 million copies in 64 languages and made Rowling the richest woman in all of Britain, even wealthier than the queen. She could live in Duxbury or Cohasset any time she wished. In fact, she could buy Duxbury or Cohasset. Or both.

I can't think of a more eagerly awaited book than volume seven of the Potter series, unless it was Bill Clinton's memoirs, particularly among those pundits with prurient interests who first thumbed through the pages to find the chapter on Monica Lewinsky.

In Harry's case, the first thing the new reader went for was the final chapter to see who survived the expected mayhem and was hoping to find the Potters, Harry and Ginny, and the kids, visiting their in-laws, the Weasleys, Ron and Hermione, and their offspring.

In some places, they were offering the services of grief counselors for the kids, just in case Harry or Ron or Hermione turned out to be one of the two major characters J. K. Rowley predicted would die in volume seven. They didn't.

If you think you've seen the last of Harry Potter, be advised that there are still two movies to go and the last one, "Harry Potter and the Order of Phoenix," brought in $140 million in its first week and is still packing them into theaters all over the country and abroad.

A theme park, "The Wizarding World of Harry Potter," is abuilding in Orlando, Fla., with an opening expected in next year, $18.8 million has been spent on Harry Potter cookies, candy and gum since 2002, and you can get an official Harry Potter wand for $29.50 and a "sorting hat" for $39.99.

A few years ago, I was browsing a used book sale at the Clift Rogers Library in Marshfield when I came across a copy of "The Torch Is Passed." Naturally, I had to have it. When I got to the girl who was taking the money, I couldn't resist.

"I wrote that," I said.

"That's nice," she said. "That'll be a dollar, please."

That's the one thrill J. K. Rowling might never know.

Seaside Road Race set for Sept. 1

Hull Academic Support Coalition will host its annual road race on Saturday, Sept. 1. The Nantasket Seaside Road Race is a scenic 4-mile run starting at Hull High School, going along Main Street in Hull Village, along the water overlooking Boston Harbor and Hull Bay, then turning up and over Allerton Hill, back along Allerton Harbor finishing back at Hull High School. This event attracts runners from all over the Boston and South Shore area.

Nantasket Seaside Road Race begins at 8 a.m. at Hull High School, 180 Main St. Participants may register online before Aug. 26 on the Town of Hull Web site, townofhull.ma.us, racersresource.com or coolrunning.com. The entry fee for this race is $15. Day of race registration opens at 6:30 a.m. at Hull High School and the fee is $20. T-shirts are given to all runners and walkers. An award ceremony will follow the race at the finish line at Hull High School.

All proceeds from this race will fund academic enrichment grants for the Hull Public Schools. Hull Academic Support Coalition is a nonprofit organization whose mission is to support and promote academics in the Hull Public Schools. HASC has provided more than $120,000 in grant money to support teacher-initiated academic enrichment projects through the grant program.

Participants may call race director Kristen Evans at 781-925-2720 for more information.

Double feature at Holly Hill Farms

Holly Hill Farm, 236 Jerusalem Road, is presenting Films on the Farm, a series of films about food and agriculture screened outside on the side of the Tomato Barn. Get a sitter, bring a picnic and lawn chairs and come check out these award winning films. Donations accepted to benefit Friends of Holly Hill Farm. Screenings begin at 8 p.m. There will be some concession stands available, including a visit from Nona's ice cream truck.

Aug. 22 double feature: "Beyond Organic: The Vision of Fairview Gardens" – "Beyond Organic" tells the story of Fairview Gardens and its long battle to survive in the face of rapid suburban development. It explores the efforts of Michael Ableman and his staff to diversify the farm, open it to educational programs for thousands of people – especially schoolchildren – and defend it against angry neighbors, hostile public officials and developers eager to re-zone the land for condominiums. Produced by PBS film maker John de Graaf and narrated by Meryl Streep.

"My Father's Garden" – An emotionally charged documentary about the use and misuse of technology on the American farm. In less than 50 years, the face of agriculture has been transformed by synthetic chemicals that have had a serious impact on the environment and on the health of farm families. This film tells the story of two farmers, different in all details, yet united by their common goal of producing healthy food. One of the farmers is the father of the filmmaker. Herbert Smith was a hero of his age: dedicated, innovative, a champion of the new miracle sprays of the 50s. His fate is the heart of this film. The other, Fred Kirschenmann of North Dakota, is a hero for our age. Faced with a shattered economy and the devastating environmental effects of conventional chemical farming, Kirschenmann steered his land through the transition to organic farming. Twenty years later, the Kirschenmann farm is a thriving testament to ingenuity, hard work and an understanding of nature. Directed by Miranda Smith, premiered at Sundance.

Watercolor sketching

Sketching is the artist's means of taking notes. Known for its portability and versatility, watercolor is an ideal sketch medium – through spontaneous color-mixing and fluid mark-making, an artist can quickly commit a momentary vision to paper.

Watercolorist Linda Bond will instruct a weekend workshop from Friday Aug. 3 through Sunday, Aug. 5, offering students with and without watercolor experience, the opportunity to experiment with the medium. Working both outdoors, and in the studios at South Shore Art Center, students will gain experience capturing form, texture and color, while maintaining a sense of atmosphere and immediacy. An artist and instructor, Bond is the recipient of numerous grants and fellowships, and is currently a professor at Massachusetts College of Art.

To register for this class, which costs $275 for the weekend, call 781-383-2787 or visit ssac.org.

South Shore Art Center is at 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset Village. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., on Monday through Saturday, and noon to 4 p.m., on Sunday.

Dinner with author

Buttonwood Books & Toys hosts "Dinner with the Author" on Tue. Jul. 31, 7 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza. Featured author is Min Jin Lee discussing "Free Food For Millionaires", the #1 Book Sense Pick for May 2007. This remarkable debut novel explores with amazing detail the many issues experienced by immigrants, particularly between generations. Her heroine, a smart, Ivy League educated, Korean immigrant, named Casey Han, leads her rich cast of characters. Casey is kicked out of the house after a fight with her old-world father. Her journey towards self- sufficiency is poignant, enlightening and thoroughly enjoyable. Min Jin Lee was born in South Korea. She went to Yale, and then attended Georgetown Law School. She has received numerous awards for her writing and her work has been featured on NPR's "Selected Shorts". Reservations & Tickets are required. A light dinner (wraps, wine/soft drink, dessert and coffee) will be served, and there is a nominal fee of $7. Please call Buttonwood at 1-781-383-2665 to reserve.

Summerfest in downtown Hingham

Summerfest in historic Downtown Hingham continues on Saturday July 28, with Family Fun Day – a mid-summer community get-together with little surprises around every corner. Larabelle the Clown returns for her fourth Summerfest. Children chat with Larabelle while she turns a balloon into a creative shape just for them. Look for the colorful clown on South Street from 10 a.m. to noon. Across the street, dogs and owners will be lining up for the first annual Dog-Owner Look Alike Contest at 10 a.m. According to Kim Sylvester of Maggie's Dog House, "Even the slightest resemblance qualifies for a delicious prize. This is a fun way to end a morning walk on the Harbor."

Live music on Bowl & Board plaza will lighten one's step as you shop for bargains on Saturday. Music continues in to the evening at the Snug Irish Pub just a few doors away on North Street. This Hingham tradition brings everyone together mid-summer for sidewalk sales, socializing, games and surprises around every corner.

Below is a partial listing of Saturday's family fun. Visit the Hingham Downtown Association Web site for a complete schedule and a list of participating shops at discoverhingham.com

10 a.m. – Maggie's Dog House. Dog and Owner Look-Alike Contest with treats for all entrants. Come share your good looks with us. Judging by 10:30 a.m.

10 a.m. to noon – Chel Bella and Zuzu's Sisters: Larabelle the Clown shaping creative balloons for children.

10 a.m. – Talbots: Goodie bags for children while supplies last.

10 a.m. to 4 p.m. – Sensational Toys: Crafts and water table fun for kids.

10 a.m. to 2 p.m. – Hingham Gift Co.: Bow making demonstrations. Refreshments for all ages and pets too.

11 a.m. to 3 p.m. – Kate Dickerson Design: Face painting for children.

11:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. – The Snug Irish Pub: Lunch special at The Snug. Bring in your receipt from a downtown purchase during Summerfest and receive a free appetizer.

Noon to 2 p.m. – Maggie's Dog House: Jessica Falzone, owner of A Pet's Peeve Mobile Pet Salon, demonstrates how to properly care for your dog's nails.

2:30 p.m. – Maggie's Dog House: Terry Haskins, professional dog trainer and owner of Sit Means Sit, demonstrates the results of training on his own amazing dogs.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. Beacon Hill Roll Call records local representatives' votes on two roll calls and local senators' votes on three roll calls from the week of July 16-20.

ALLOW CITIES AND TOWNS TO JOIN STATE HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN (H 4110)

House 154-0, Senate 34-0, approved and sent to Gov. Deval Patrick a bill allowing cities and towns to enroll their local employees in the state-operated group health insurance plan. Supporters said that the bill would give local employees more plans and broader coverage from which to choose. They noted that the switch to the state plan would save money for many cities and towns through reduced administrative costs and lower cost plans negotiated by the state which has increased purchasing power. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill allowing cities and towns to enroll their local employees in the state-operated group health insurance plan).

FOLD LOCAL PENSION SYSTEMS INTO STATE PENSION SYSTEM (H 4125)

House 140-14, approved (Senate approved on a voice vote without a roll call) and sent to the governor legislation requiring the assets of 157 city and town pension systems to be folded into and managed by the state pension fund. The 157 systems include 19 individual cities or towns and 138 cities and towns that are currently part of six county systems. The systems do not meet the legislation's requirements to continue to operate independently. The bill provides for state management of any system with earnings two percent or more lower than the state's average percentage of return over the past ten years and which are not meeting newly-established parameters to pay off their unfunded liabilities. Current law allows but does not require all local pension systems to join the state system. Supporters said that the legislation would easily increase investment returns for these underperforming local pension systems by an estimated $100 million and would lower property taxes in many of the communities. They noted that the $50 billion state pension fund is superbly managed and has more leverage in dealing with investment firms. They argued that these local systems would have generated an additional $700 million if they had been operated by the state over the past several years. Some opponents said that the legislation is another example of the state unnecessarily taking away power from local communities. Others noted that the proposal would not generate sufficient extra revenue to lower property taxes. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill requiring the assets of 157 pension systems to be folded into and managed by the state pension fund. A "No" vote is against the bill).

JURY DUTY (S 2261)

Senate 34-0, approved a bill changing the current law that exempts people who are called for jury duty from being called again during the three calendar years following the date of service. The bill would reduce the length of the exemption by allowing jurors to be called again three years from the date of their service. For example, under current law, a juror who served in May 2007 would be exempt until May 2011. Under the bill, the same juror would be exempt only until May 2010. Supporters said that Suffolk County has a severe juror shortage that is caused by a rise in violent crimes and the exemption from jury duty of the growing number of students and people who do not speak English. They argued that without the change, the county would run out of jurors in three months. They noted that this would lead to delayed trials and demands by defense attorneys to let accused rapists and murderers out on bail. The House has already approved the bill. Only final House and Senate approval are necessary prior to the measure going to Gov. Patrick. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill).

IDENTITY THEFT (H 4144)

Senate 34-0, approved (House approved on a voice vote without a roll call) and sent to Gov. Patrick a bill aimed at stopping identity theft and preventing an impostor from opening a new credit account using stolen personal information. A key provision allows a consumer to temporarily "freeze" his or her credit report and prevent the three major credit bureaus from issuing the report without his or her consent. Consumers would be issued a PIN number to temporarily unfreeze their credit reports when they apply for credit. Most companies will not issue credit without a credit report and would deny an impostor's application for credit when a credit report is frozen. The one-time cost to the consumer to freeze his or her credit report is $5. Consumers would also be required to pay $5 each time they unfreeze the account. Companies would be prohibited from charging a fee to victims of identity theft or their spouses. The measure also requires all businesses and state and local governments to notify consumers quickly when there has been a breach of security that might compromise a customer's privacy. Supporters said that identity theft is now a major problem and has affected the lives of many people across the nation. They noted that Massachusetts is lagging behind more than 30 states that have laws dealing with this crime. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

FORM PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNIONS WITHOUT ELECTIONS (H 2465) – The Senate approved a bill changing the way that public employee unions can be formed in Massachusetts. Under current law, if 30 percent of workers sign cards indicating their support for forming a union, a secret ballot election is held and a union is formed if workers approve the formation at the election. The bill would create another option that automatically creates a union without a secret ballot election if a majority of workers sign cards. The measure has already been approved by the House and only final House and Senate approval are necessary prior to the proposal going to the governor.

BAN INTERNET HUNTING (S 2273) – The House gave initial approval to a Senate-approved bill banning "Internet hunting" – the practice of using a mouse click on a home computer to kill confined animals on a distant game ranch. Trophy mounts of the animal are often prepared and shipped to the customer. The measure imposes up to a 2.5 year prison sentence and/or $2,500 fine on violators. The bill was filed at the request of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Some 22 states have already outlawed this controversial practice.

Time to give 'going local' a try

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JoAnn Mirise

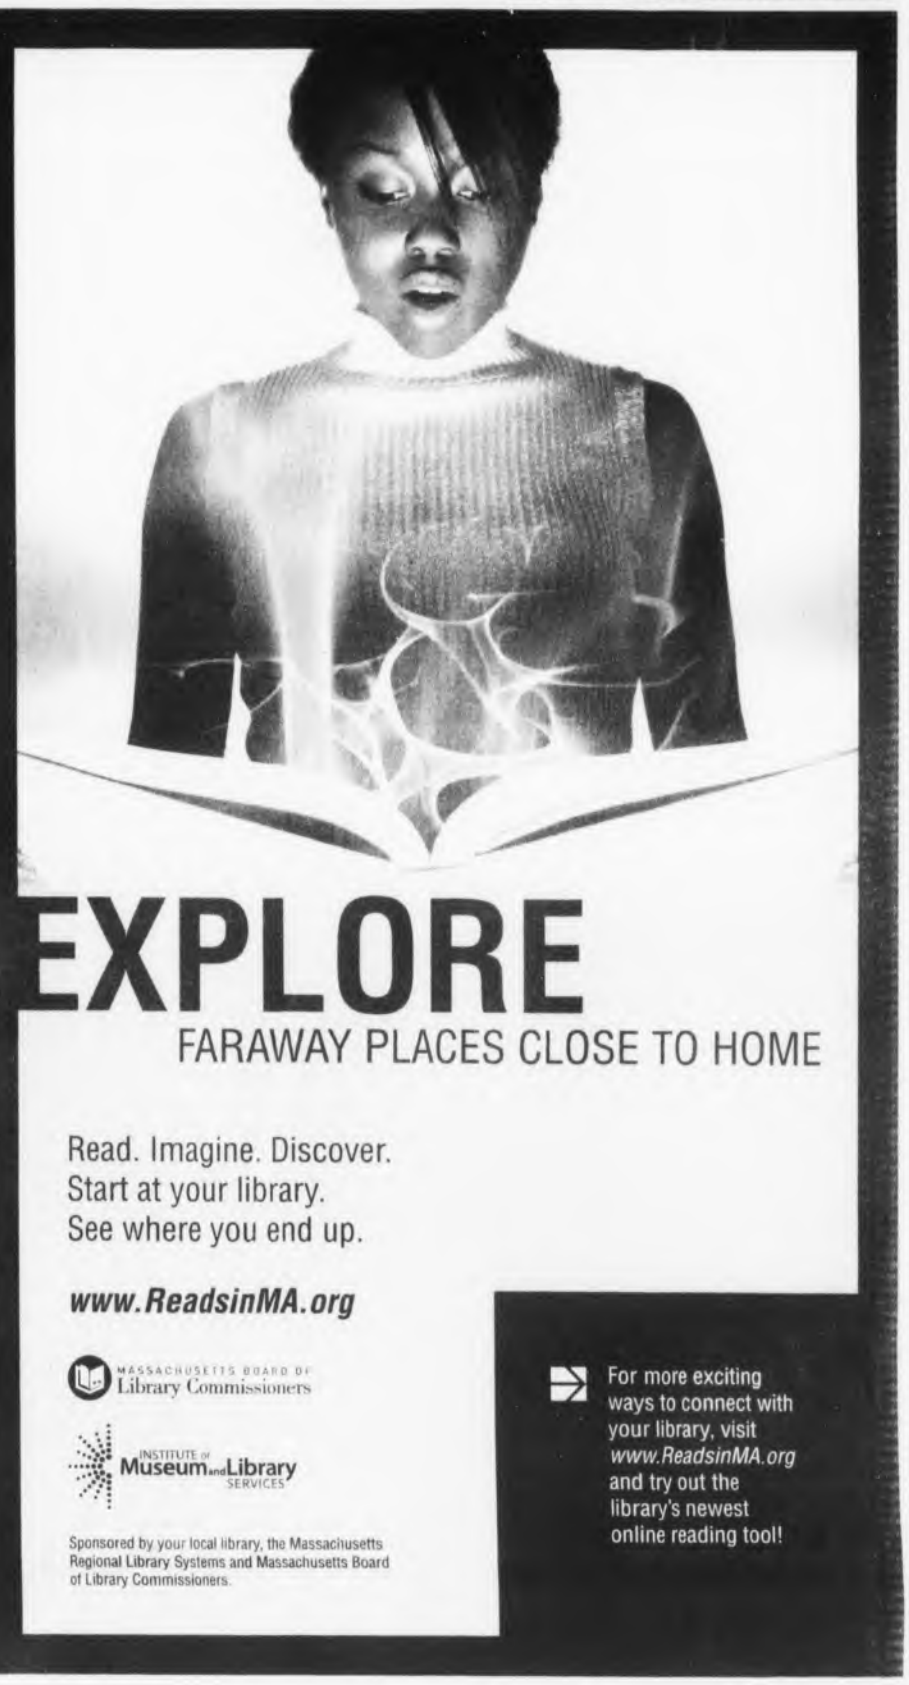
By promoting the practice of eating locally grown foods that are in season, she has, by example, shown that living sustainably does not mean deprivation and compromise.

I have never had a hero. This hasn't posed much of a problem throughout life except in those rare instances in school when asked to write an essay on the subject. Once when I tried to write about how it was impossible for any one person to live up to the loaded meaning of that word, my teacher asked me to re-do the assignment because she thought I wasn't trying hard enough. There had to be someone I considered heroic. I did what any self-serving kid would do who wanted to get out of the seventh grade with their GPA intact. I made up something. It was a creative writing class after all.

These days, the closest I come to hero worship is my ongoing list of people (living or dead) who I would invite to my ultimate dinner party. And although some guests would be far from typical hero-material with their sordid backgrounds or controversial beliefs, they all exemplified at some point in their life a combination of passion, integrity, courage and perseverance.

Guests have come and gone on my list over the years but one that has remained is Alice Waters, local foods advocate and renowned chef at Chez Panisse in Berkeley, Calif. I would simply love to spend an evening surrounded by her intention of living the good life. This woman is one part style, one part talent and one big, heaping scoop of heart. By promoting the practice of eating locally grown foods that are in season, she has, by example, shown that living sustainably does not mean deprivation and compromise. In fact, she has proven the opposite. Life is far richer, far more joyful when lived in harmony with the earth.

One of my favorite stories about Alice occurred when her daughter, Fanny, went off to Yale in 2001. Alice was disturbed by the food options that would be provided to her daughter in the dining hall. She went to the university president with a proposal. The goal would be to not only provide wholesome, natural foods, but to also bring students closer to the land and sources of what they eat. Despite the assumptions that kids wouldn't give up their pizza and hotdogs, the university, in partnership with local Connecticut farms and chefs, launched the Yale Sustainability Project.



The students came in droves to chow down on parsnips and potato puree in the winter and mixed greens with roasted shallot vinaigrette in the spring. Some students resorted to faking the IDs necessary to get into the particular dining hall that was piloting the program just to eat the homegrown, home-cooked goodness. As a result of the project, there is now a one-acre farm on campus, and popular accredited academic courses, informal workshops, and campus events highlighting food and responsible agriculture.

Around the country, the word is spreading. Demand is growing for fruits and vegetables raised without genetic modification and pesticides, and meat and fish raised in clean, humane environments. The impact of the resources and waste involved in packaging and transporting food around the globe is becoming a factor in our decision-making process at the market. And a consciousness is developing that our processed, fast-food culture is an empty proposition. Furthermore, the myth that buying organic and local foods is a luxury available to an elitist few is finally being debunked. Safe, fresh, delicious food without the agribusiness baggage is our right. We owe it to ourselves to accept nothing less.

With New England poised for the height of harvest, now is the time to give "going local" a try. Farmers markets and community farms are the best way to get started. By going to resources such as Localharvest.org you can locate local sources of most things on your shopping list. A good rule is to start with what you can buy nearest to you and move further from there. I buy a large percentage of my vegetables and fruits from farmers markets. And if I'm lucky my backyard garden will reward me with lots of tomatoes and squash. My eggs come from a small operation in Rockland and are available through the natural food store in town. I go a little further for grains and cheese, which originate in Vermont.

And then there are the items, which rack up the miles that I have yet to break up with: wine from California, bananas from Peru, avocados from Mexico, and chocolate from anywhere. I suppose this is the reason I am keeping my ultimate dinner party list up-to-date. I never know when I might have to call upon one of my guests for inspiration when faced with a tough decision. It's not a perfect approach, but at least it's more than I was doing yesterday.

HEALTH NOTES

Reality check: It's a dangerous world

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Perhaps the first thing we should be emphasizing is vigilance.

Maybe, it's Chicken Little calling.

Usually, this column has been an orderly arrangement of facts stolen from various authorities describing an infirmity, its cause, and symptoms with perhaps a few words about how many others are afflicted and finally, what you might do to rid yourself of it. However, as has been said: things are changing ever more rapidly. Recently, the Board of Health has been receiving increasingly frequent notifications of unhealthy conditions from which we are supposed to be protecting ourselves. Perhaps the first thing we should be emphasizing is vigilance.

Recently, it's food-borne illnesses.

Two recent incidents are particularly disturbing. Robert's American Gourmet brand Veggie Booty has been associated with Salmonella. Most persons infected with salmonella develop diarrhea, fever, and abdominal cramps 12 to 72 hours after infection. The illness usually lasts four to seven days, and most persons recover without treatment. Illnesses associated with this product have been reported in Massachusetts.

A second report, the recent recall of Castleberrys food products (virtually the entire line) associated with botulism. All forms of botulism can be fatal and are considered medical emergencies. Food-borne botulism can be especially dangerous because many people can be poisoned by eating a contaminated food, although, the present recall was based on four cases of the illness. The classic symptoms of botulism include double vision, blurred vision, drooping eyelids, slurred speech, difficulty swallowing, dry mouth, and muscle weakness. All are symptoms of the muscle paralysis caused by the bacterial toxin. If untreated, these symptoms may progress to cause paralysis of the arms, legs, trunk and respiratory muscles. In food-borne botulism, symptoms generally begin 18 to 36 hours after eating a contaminated food, but they can occur as early as six hours or as late as 10 days. Untreated, the affliction is fatal. Illnesses associated with this product have been reported in Indiana and Texas.

Cooking and Food Preparation:

Vigilance is also important at home, for example when cooking.

First: Proper heating and reheating will kill food borne bacteria. However, some food borne bacteria produce poisons or toxins that are not destroyed by high cooking temperatures if the food is left out at room temperature for an extended period of time. An example is the food borne bacteria staphylococcus. This bacterium produces a toxin that can develop in cooked foods that sit out at room temperature for more than two hours.

Also: Keep everything clean. Wash hands with warm water and soap for at least 20 seconds before starting to prepare a meal and after handling raw meat or poultry. Cover long hair with a net or scarf, and be sure that any open sores or cuts on the hands are completely covered. If the sore or cut is infected, stay out of the kitchen.

Wash countertops with a solution of 5 milliliters (1 teaspoon) of chlorine bleach to about 1 liter (1 quart) of water or with a commercial kitchen cleaning agent diluted according to product directions. They're the most effective at getting rid of bacteria.

Keep hot foods hot and cold foods cold. Use a thermometer with a small-diameter stem to ensure that meats are completely cooked. Insert the thermometer 1 to 2 inches into the center of the food and wait 30 seconds to ensure an accurate measurement. Beef (including ground beef), lamb, and pork should be cooked to at least 71 C (160 F); whole poultry and thighs to 82 C (180 F); poultry breasts to 77 C (170 F); and ground chicken or turkey to 74 C (165 F). Don't eat poultry that is pink inside.

So, it comes down to ordering our lives to avoid the things we can and cope with those we can't. Meanwhile enjoy the weather, eat well, but prudently, and have fun.

By the way: Since we're keeping up about things sanitary: recently seen about Town: two dog mess removal trucks: Back Yard Butler and Doody Calls. This not an endorsement.

selves, as was suggested. Unfortunately for us taxpayers, problems of this magnitude usually involve money.

On the other hand, creative and innovative solutions like the Army Corps of Engineers' proposal for Treats Pond ought to be considered very carefully by the taxpaying public. After all, the Federal Government will pay 65 percent of the total cost of this project; and with state matching grants, we could potentially save 80 percent of the entire project cost or perhaps even more. It's no wonder coastal communities throughout Massachusetts are scrambling to take advantage of the Army Corps' salt marsh restoration program.

If we can protect Cohasset Harbor and combine best management practices for pollution prevention and run-off control with federal and state funded programs to solve otherwise Town funded liabilities, then it seems like a better way to go.

In the meantime, phragmites have destroyed the fond memories of ice skating on Treats Pond. Today it exists as a neglected environmental ruin. And our children may find better ice skating conditions on the heavily polluted and dangerously flooded back yards of Cohasset taxpayers all over town.

Martin A. Nee lives at 109 Atlantic Ave.

Mr. Nee, who is a member of Cohasset's Stormwater Management Committee, said his views do not necessarily reflect those of the committee.

South Rail eyes Greenbush as model train

By Ed Baker
EBAKER@CNC.COM

Southeastern Massachusetts' community leaders are trying to decide if the MBTA's Greenbush commuter rail design should be replicated in the T's South Coast Rail project.

Officials from several cities and towns along the proposed South Coast Rail enjoyed a train ride on the Greenbush line last Friday with Bernard Cohen, State Secretary of Transportation and Public Works, to help them understand how the project was built.

"Thank you for joining us today," Cohen said inside a train coach as it chugged to its first stop in Weymouth Landing. "This is a great opportunity for us to see a commuter line that has something in common with the South Coast Rail project that we are looking to build. I hope you will all learn something."

The South Coast Rail will extend from Boston's South Station to New Bedford when it is completed.

Greenbush extends from South Station in Boston and rolls through Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate and includes passenger stations in each town.

"This is a great opportunity for us to see a commuter line that has something in common with the South Coast Rail project that we are looking to build."

— Bernard Cohen, State Secretary of Transportation and Public Works

New Bedford Mayor Scott Lang said commuter rail service in southeastern Massachusetts will give a much needed economic boost to the region.

"The city wants to be connected by rail," he said during a stop at Weymouth Landing station. "I came here today to get a feel for the logistics of building a railway line and how mitigation would be done on a rail project.

MBTA Project Director James Eng said construction workers took many steps to address environmental concerns such as excess train noise and wetlands encroachment while Greenbush was constructed.

"If 1,000 square feet of wetlands was taken, there was 2,000 square feet of wetlands created," he said.

Additional efforts to protect wildlife habitat include the installation of culverts underneath the railroad tracks for turtles and small creatures to use.

Eng said many people initially opposed the Greenbush before it was built.

"I don't want to give you hints," he said to the entourage with a smile. "But a lot of the mitigation issues have been addressed."

Some of the mitigation concerns addressed included the prevention of nighttime light pollution from lamps at T stations and reduction of train noise with sound barriers.

"The lights here in the parking lot at this station do not shine into the neighborhood," Eng said during a stop at West Hingham Station. "They shine downward."

The T plans to shut off lights at its stations when train service ends at 11:45 p.m. each night.

Efforts by the T to reduce noise from speeding trains include the placement of ballast mats on fencing in some locations along the Greenbush line. The T plans to further reduce train noise by keeping its locomotive engines turned off at its layover facility in Scituate unless the temperature is below 10 degrees.

Train engineers will further keep noise to a minimum by not blowing train whistles except during an emergency.

South Coast Rail Manager Kristina Egan said southeastern Massachusetts residents and community leaders view the forthcoming rail project as an economic boon to their region.

"What some people are trying to do down there is cluster new homes around the T station," she said. "People want to be able to live or work in close proximity to the T stations. They are looking for economic development down there."

Egan said some south coast residents are concerned about having railroad tracks too close to their homes.

"We do have an active task force that is addressing the neighbors' concerns," he said. "There is a lot of support for the rail line."

Cohen said the Greenbush rail line is a good model for the South Coast Rail project to follow.

"The sound barriers have mitigated the train vibrations," he said. "Everything looks good and real attractive."

"Noise walls" along the Greenbush line neighborhoods, like this one in Cohasset, will help buffer the sound of trains.

Taking another look at Wompatuck State Park

Offers plenty of fun for the family

By Sam Butterfield
CORRESPONDENT

This summer Wompatuck State Park has stepped up its offerings.

The 4000-acre plus park which extends into Hingham, Cohasset, Norwell, and Scituate has dozens of free programs this summer for all ages and tastes, says Interpreter Mary Brennan, 29.

"I don't think many people realize how much is going on, especially the free stuff for mothers and caregivers with children," Brennan says.

Although July is winding down, an unlit night hike through Wompatuck to observe nocturnal animals is planned on the 27th.

Brennan, who is originally from the Berkshires, explained one goal of the state Department of Conservation and Recreation – which oversees the state parks — is to offer interesting programs for all.

An example is the park history nights that focus on "the park's stories," she says. For instance, few probably know that the park once housed a functioning ice shop at the turn of the 20th century or was home to a log cabin that belonged to a world-renowned hunter.

The park also offers "frogging," mountain biking, camping, hiking, and rock-climbing.

Brennan says one of the park's main objectives is to offer a place that is very child friendly, which is part of the reason the park has stepped up security and safety precautions this summer.

Brennan said there is always an EPO (environmental police officer) on duty as well as one park ranger, and one interpretive ranger.

"It's understandable that people are scared to be in here by themselves because it's kind of backwoods," she said. "But the programs we're offering are very family oriented, Wompatuck is getting a facelift and the DCR has invested in both safety and security."

In addition to the staff, which is always on duty, there are also 10 maintenance workers and a second interpretive ranger and park ranger who work part time.

Wompatuck has a rich history. Josiah Wompatuck gave the park to the town of Hingham in the 17th century. Through the years it has always been rugged and wild but has been home to a variety of things, from light industry to military complexes. The park, like Bare Cove, Hingham's other large park, served as a military installation from 1943 to 1967 before it was returned to the state.

Its military days are still evident throughout the park as bunkers and concrete structures dot the landscape. The park's history dates to long before Mr. Wompatuck, however. It is home to large glacial deposits, which mark the park in various spots. The rock formations are dramatic and jagged and pose an exciting challenge to adrenaline seekers.

What is the park's most appealing feature? That's up to each visitor, though Brennan ventured that "There are some really, really cool hiking trails and if you take the time to get off the beaten path, there are some very beautiful places."

Wompatuck is also one of the few local parks that offers camping with electrical hookups, a dumping station and hot showers. These facilities are open from April 15 to Nov. 1 and see a fair amount of use all summer from people who are visiting the area from all across the United States and Canada.

Wompatuck State Park Interpreter Mary Brennan tells a story during the Kaleidoscope program at the Visitors Center on Tuesday morning.

Activities to choose from this summer

Wompatuck State Park Department of Conservation and Recreation will hold the following summer programs. All programs are free and open to the public. An adult must accompany children. All programs meet at the Visitor Center on Union Street unless otherwise indicated. Reasonable accommodations available upon request. For information or to register call 781-749-7160 or email Mary Brennan at: mbrennan@ mpsd.org

Glimpse of the past— Join others at 1 p.m., on Sunday, Aug. 5, at the Visitor Center at Wompatuck State Park for a look into Wompatuck's military history as an Ammunition Depot. Several veterans who were stationed there will tell of their experiences at Wompatuck State Park in the 1940s. This is an opportunity to learn about America's past!

History Bike Ride — 5:30- 6:30 p.m. Friday (July 28) — For all ages. Join an interpreter on a bike ride through Wompatuck and learn about the history of the park. Be sure to bring water and insect repellent.

Free Musical Concert 7- 9 p.m., Friday (July 28) — Come to the Visitor Center for FREE musical concert put on by the Neustadter Trio, a family who's been entertaining a variety of audiences for more than 10 years. Bring the whole family to Wompatuck for this fantastic performance by talented musicians. The Neustadter Trio has several CDs out of classic encores and easy listening tunes.

Night Hike — 8:30 - 9:30 p.m., Friday (July 28) — Take a walk in the woods with the Interpreter – no flashlights allowed! We will learn about how animals of the night use their senses to survive in the dark. Program cancelled in the event of rain.

Weekly Walk — 10 - 11:30a.m. Sunday (July 29) — For all ages. Join us for a two and a half to three mile walk that explores some little known trails in Wompatuck. They'll be stories of Wompatuck's history and some plant identification along the way. Meet at the Visitor Center.

Arts and Crafts —1 – 2p.m., Sunday (July 29), Ages 3-6. Join an interpreter in an hour of arts and crafts at Wompatuck. This is just for the little ones and an adult! Meet at the Visitor Center.

Kids and Nature Exploration – Held from 10 to11:30 a.m. each Monday, this program is designed for children ages 7 to12 to explore the natural world of Wompatuck State Park. Each week, the walk will focus on a different theme and topic and will include activities such as ponding, birding, looking for bugs and other fun things. Cancelled in the event of rain.

Kaleidoscope Kids – Held from 10 to 11 a.m., each Tuesday for pre-school age children ages 3 to 6 only, and a parent or caregiver. Join the park interpreter for some fun that is just for the little ones. Each week they will explore a fun topic by reading a story, exploring the world around us and completing a fun craft project. Each week there is a different theme. Held rain or shine.

Fridays Night Hike – Take a walk in the woods with the interpreter from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m.. No flashlights allowed. Learn about how animals of the night use their senses to survive in the dark. Program will be cancelled in the event of rain.

Saturday Junior Rangers – Held from 1 to 2 p.m. throughout July, this program is for children ages 8 to14. You will receive your official junior ranger activity guide, complete a fun activity with the park interpreter and be on your way to earning your junior ranger patch and certificate. Held rain or shine.

'Watch Your Step' program offered

The Norwell Visiting Nurse Association to offer "Watch Your Step" Program on Friday, Aug. 3, at Cohasset Elder Affairs, from 9:30 to 11 a.m.

The goal of the Watch Your Step program is to provide education as well as health and promotion activities targeted to reduce falls and fall related injuries. The program will include a 45 minute presentation on fall prevention, followed by a screening of the participants fall risk. Participants will be given a score as to their overall stability and safety. Attendees will receive Home Safety and Fall Prevention literature with specific strategies to increase safety within the community.

This program is open to seniors of any community served by the Norwell VNA. Participants must be pre-registered. Call 781-383-9112 to sign up.

Pirates win Major League championship

This report originally appeared on the CYBSA web site, www.cybsa.net.

For all you long suffering fellow Pirates fans, past players and casual admirers the Pirates have finally ended the long drought. They are the 2007 Cohasset Major League champions.

The Pirates entered the playoffs as fifth seed and never looked back. The first playoff game was a victory against the Mets, winning 10-2 with exceptional pitching from Jamie Timothy and great hitting by Trevor Schramn, collecting five RBI.

Round 2 was against the Cardinals. The series went down to the wire of the third game. Game 1 was a narrow 8-7 Cardinals win, thanks to a Jack Kuppens walk-off home run. Derek Buffum was masterful for the Pirates, pitching five very tough innings and allowing only one run.

Game 2 was all Pirates, winning 14-2. Mike O'Brien had a huge evening, going 3-for-4 including a home run. The other big hitters that night were rookie Jeff Powers going 3-for-4 and knocking in several runs in the process.

Game 3 was uphill all the way. The Cardinals went up 5-0 by the end of the second inning. The Pirates added a run in the third courtesy of a Joe Buckley double. In the fourth inning, the Pirates added one more run with nice hitting by Alex Lauretti and Tom Ryan to inch closer to make it 5-2.

The fifth inning is when the wind shifted into the Pirates' sails, scoring four runs and taking the lead 6-5. Then in the sixth inning the bats stayed alive, scoring another four runs. The sixth inning heroics included Pat Fedele with his biggest hit of his young career and Tom Powers singling to center. The Pirates win 10-7 to advance to the Championship Series.

The Pirates' players and coaches celebrate after winning the Major League championship.

Round 3

Game 1, Dodgers win 5-2. Chris Brash put the game away with a three-run home run in the bottom of the fifth inning.

The Pirates knew there was only one way Game 2 had to end in order to keep the championship dream alive. They started off the first inning with one run and kept the bats going by getting seven more in the second. Timothy ruled the hill with five strikeouts and superior defense in the field allowing no runs to score in the first five innings for the Dodgers. The Pirates' bats came alive again in the 5th inning scoring 6 more runs. Final score Pirates 14 – Dodgers 2.

Game 3 was played on a perfect night for baseball: great temperatures, a huge crowd standing around the field. Liam O'Connell announcing the game ... perfect. Once the players were introduced and the national anthem played with the flag blowing in the gentle breeze the Dodgers took the field.

The Pirates got on the board early with Timothy hitting a home run and bringing home O'Brien. Buffum, Powers and Buckley continuing the inning with hits, making it 4-0.

Buckley pitched superbly (as he has done all season long), keeping the Dodgers off the board for the first two innings. The Dodgers brought in their ace pitcher in the second inning to try to stop the Pirates, but Timothy hit another home run sending O'Brien home and making the score 6-0.

The Dodgers battled back in the third, getting two runs. In the fourth, Timothy hit a clutch single, plating O'Brien for the third time. The Dodgers got three runs in the bottom of the fourth and added one more in the fifth to make it 7-6.

With a one-run lead the Pirates brought in O'Brien to close the game. The veteran went up against the top three batters in the Dodgers' lineup. First, the lead-off hitter hit a pop-up to second base, where Schramn made a diving catch.

After an intentional walk, O'Brien induced a dramatic double play to end the game. Pirates win!

Richie's Run, Aug. 2

Richie's Run, a USA Track & Field sanctioned event for boys and girls age 2-18, will take place Thursday, Aug. 2 at Scituate High School. Registration begins at 4:30 pm.

The event includes a variety of races, and this year a 40-yard dash is being added. Winners of that race will win a cash prize.

Richie's Run is organized in the memory of Richie Minehan, who died suddenly seven years ago. He played football for SHS as well as for Plymouth State. The event raises money for a scholarship to a graduating senior of SHS.

Entry is $5 per participant or $10 per family. For more information, log on to www.richierun.org.

Cohasset Cobras play ball in Cooperstown

A group of Cohasset boys, aged 10-13, recently returned from a week of playing baseball in Cooperstown, NY, home to the Baseball Hall of Fame.

This team, the sixth Cohasset team to play in this tournament in as many years, was made up of Christopher Brash, Christopher Sylvia, Alec Hurd, Derrick Buffam, Evan Yeager, Harrison Durant, Steven Maher, Rocco Laugelle, Jack Leffel, Charlie Blackington and Steven Iantosca.

The team was coached by Mike Maher, Jay Blackington and Johnny Maher (a three-year alum of this tournament).

Ninety-six teams from around the country traveled to the middle of New York State to play in the world's largest baseball tournament. Most of the teams were club or AAU teams, having played dozens of games together.

The Cohasset Cobras

The Cobras had their first complete team practice in Cooperstown and were witness to some spectacular youth baseball action. Although they lost every game, the Cobras that ended the week were far better ball players than they were at their first game. Learning about secondary leads, picking off base runners, pitching from the stretch and much more made the Dreamspark baseball experience a learning experience.

Coach Maher said, "I prepared the boys for the level of competition that they would be facing. My goal was to improve each boys' ability and have them return to Cohasset better ball players then when they arrived in Cooperstown.

"I told them to focus on execution and limit the mental mistakes. Physical mistakes happen. But if they could reduce the amount of mental errors in any given game, then regardless of the score, they were winners. I was feeling down for the boys after a particularly brutal game, and then Jack Leffel came up to me and thanked me for bringing him to Cooperstown. He said he was having so much fun. That made the week for me."

Baseball highlights include Chris Brash's home run, Harrison Durant's pitching, Rocco Laugelle in the outfield, Steven Maher's double, Evan Yeager's play at short stop and in the outfield, 10 year olds Charlie Blackington and Steven Iantosca standing tall against the competitive 12-13 years both on the mound and at the plate, Jack Leffel's left field catch, Alec Hurd behind the plate, catching, for every inning but 2, Chris Sylvia playing second base for the first time, and Derrick Buffam pitching and playing short.

The Cooperstown Dreamspark experience is so much more than baseball. New friends are made and existing friendships are strengthened through the bond of spending the week together. The Cohasset boys met kids from the Carolinas, Texas, Hawaii (yes, there were two teams from Hawaii), California, Utah, etc. Kids trade pins and say "Hey, where are you from?" The team traveled together to the Baseball Hall of Fame where Harrison Durant's great uncle, Peter Gammons, was honored.

The team bunked together in a cabin and ate together with other teams in the mess tent. It was definitely a week to remember.

Tough start for Outlaws

Open season with 10-7 loss

By Michael Raciti
CORRESPONDENT

PLYMOUTH - The South Shore Outlaws semiprofessional football team kicked off its season Saturday night with a bittersweet home loss to the Whaling City Clippers at Plymouth South High School.

"I can't get [the loss] out of my head, but at the same time I also can't stop thinking about how well our defense played," general manager Ron Rezendes said the day after the 10-7 nail biter.

Despite a defensive effort, which included two interceptions, several big hits and timely sacks, the offense never got its gears working, forcing the team to rely on its only defensive score, a 97-yard touchdown interception by Joune Frasier.

The offense struggled from the start of the game. In an early series it opted to go for a fourth-and-short on its own 25-yard line. Failing to convert the Outlaws handed their opposition the ball just outside of the red zone with a clean set of downs.

It didn't take long for the Clippers to take advantage, as they scored on a deep pass play to go up 7-0.

After the Outlaws were forced to punt, Whaling City began the drive that ended in the Frasier pickoff. The interception was the result of excellent pass-rush defense by the Outlaws who forced the Clippers quarterback to roll out of the pocket and make a helpless attempt at his own end zone, only to be greeted by the hands of Frasier who completed the athletic play by joining the Outlaw cheerleaders with a fan pleasing pom-pom photo shoot.

After tying the game at seven apiece, Frasier and the Outlaw faithful had plenty to cheer about as the defense continued to pressure the Clippers offense. Meanwhile, the Outlaws offense continued to sputter.

Quarterback Matt Letourneau experienced trouble locating open receivers, but despite the struggles he managed to move the team within field-goal range with a combination of scrambles and handoffs to his backfield tandem of Brian Lewis and Luis Gonzalzes. Kicker John Carpenter couldn't convert though as the Clippers partially blocked the ball, and the game remained tied.

The Clippers took over and struck quickly, picking up 48 yards on a first down pass. Outlaws' captain Brian Rezendes and his defense were not ready to let the Clippers take the lead quite yet though. In a similar play to Frasier's interception, the Clippers quarterback rolled to his right and rushed his pass after being chased out of the pocket. Rezendes got in its path and tacked on a 23-yard return to give the Outlaws' offense a shot at adding to their first half score. Time ran short, and the teams headed to their locker rooms, still in the midst of an even ballgame.

The second half didn't start well as Letourneau threw an interception of his own. But the defense stepped up again behind a Hank Anderson sack, throwing the Clippers' quarterback 20 yards behind the line of scrimmage. On the ensuing play, it was Anderson again who was responsible for putting up a wall on a Clippers' rush attempt, collecting one of his 11 tackles.

"He was outstanding, it was exciting to watch him play," Rezendes said about Anderson. "We have high expectations for him and some of the other guys."

After the Outlaws' offense went four-and-out, Steve Medieros scooped up a Clippers' fumble to put the Outlaws back on the field. The offensive woes continued though, as the draw play that proved reliable in the first half suddenly became ineffective. The Clippers got the ball back and took the lead on a field goal, going up 10-7.

On the Clippers' next drive, defensive end Dave Reed came up with a big sack to force a long field goal attempt. Rezendes had other ideas though as he picked up his ninth field goal block in five years with the Outlaws, keeping his team within striking distance.

While the ingredients for a comeback lay on the cutting board, the offensive just wasn't sharp enough to make the cut in their first game.

"I would've hoped to for the W, to start on a positive note," Rezendes said. "But there was some good to come out of this game too. This is a very good team but football is a funny game, anything can happen."

Rezendes says this year's schedule is particularly tough, but he considers the Outlaws one of the top teams in the New England Football League.

This weekend the Outlaws travel across the border to face the Woonsocket Sentinels. Rather than a Saturday night game though the game against the team from Rhode Island will take place Sunday, July 29, at Barry Field. The game is at 2 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 4, the Outlaws return home to host the Southern New England Rage at Plymouth South High School. The game is a 7 p.m. Admission is $5.

Kissick qualifies for NE Meet

WEYMOUTH - Cohasset's Hope Kissick, Scituate's Brian McGuiness and Norwell's Danny Caldwell and Peter McDonald are among 18 members of the Weymouth Waves to qualify for the 2007 New England Long Course Open Championships that will held this weekend (July 27-30) at Harvard University's Boldgett Pool.

For the Waves, who swim out of the Weymouth Club, it will mark the conclusion of the Long Course season. The team will then have a break from the competitive season until the second week of September when it opens the Short Course season.

Of the five local competitors:

The 13-year-old Kissick will compete in the 100 and 200 breaststroke and the 50 freestyle

The 17-year-old McGuiness has qualified for the 50, 100, 200, 400, and 1500 freestyles

The 14-year-old Caldwell will be one of the busiest swimmers competing as he is entered in the 50, 100, 200, 400 and 1500 freestyles, the 200 and 400 individual medleys, the 100 and 200 breaststrokes, and the 100 and 200 flies.

And, the 13-year-old McDonald is entered in the 100 and 200 breaststroke and the 100 and 200 individual medleys

Hingham's Milou Lammers, a 14-year-old who has qualified for three events—the 50 freestyle as well as the 100 and 200 breaststroke.

"It has been an awesome (long course) season," said Waves head coach Mike Riley. "Among our highlights were our ninth-place finish out of 26 teams at the Eastern Invitational Meet in Greensboro, NC plus, for the first time ever, we had three swimmers qualify for the Super Sectionals at Maryland."

Of the 18 Weymouth Wave swimmers who will be competing this weekend, 10 are women, while eight are men.

In alphabetical order, the women swimmers are:

Rose Buckley (Brockton)...the 50 freestyle.

Caitlin Cronin (Kingston)...the 50, 100, 200, and 400 freestyle as well as the 100 and 200 backstroke.

Anne Kaduboski (Dedham)... 100 and 200 fly, the 100 and 200 backstroke, the 100 and 200 fly and the 400 individual medley

Katherine Kenney (Dedham)... the 50, 100, and 200 freestyle and the 200 individual medley

Milou Lammers (Hingham)... the 100 and 200 breaststroke and the 100 and 200 backstroke

Clarissa Palmer (Randolph)... the 50 freestyle

Jeri Rosenberg (Canton)...the 100 backstroke

Samantha Sliwinski (Weymouth)...the 50, 100, and 200 freestyle and the 100 and 200 backstroke

Alyssa Stevens (Quincy)...the 50 and 100 freestyle

In addition to Caldwell, McGuiness, and McDonald, the other men swimmers, in alphabetical order are

Kevin Boddie (Weymouth)... 200 breaststroke

Charles Clark (Weymouth)... 100 and 200 freestyles and the 100 fly

Chris Horan (Hanover)...the 100 and 200 freestyles

Kyle Ripley (Weymouth)...200 breaststroke and 400 individual medley

Ian Sliwinski (Weymouth)...50, 100, and 200 freestyle and 100 and 200 backstroke.

FOCUS ON HIGHER EDUCATION

Education fuels president of Bridgewater State College

By Janice Nickerson
ENTERPRISE CORRESPONDENT

BRIDGEWATER - After graduating from high school in Wareham in the 1960s, Dana Mohler-Faria found himself in South Dakota for four years refueling planes.

The first person in his family to graduate from high school - his father worked in construction and his mother in cranberry bogs - he had joined the Air Force Reserves, but had no intention of going to college.

But those four years, from 1966 to 1970, were pivotal in his life.

Mohler-Faria said it was there that he was encouraged to go back to school by another Air Force reservist, Albert Kelley, who was a few years older. Kelley pushed him to attend college, and as a result, Mohler-Faria took two classes at Black Hill State College, then returned to Massachusetts to further his education.

That encouragement was a turning point in the path which, years later, led him to become head of the largest of the nine Massachusetts state colleges and the fourth largest of the state's 29 public colleges and universities.

As the 11th president of Bridgewater State College and its first president of color, Mohler-Faria, 59, has recently been tapped by Gov. Deval Patrick in a volunteer role to evaluate the state's education structure from pre-kindergarten through college.

Mohler-Faria met the governor last summer, when then-candidate Patrick toured the college campus on the campaign trail.

Mohler-Faria describes it as "the day I drank the Kool-Aid." He said he spent 1 1/2 hours with the candidate and discovered similarities in background, style and ideology.

It seemed like a good fit: The second Cape Verdean in the country to attain the position of college president, and the second African-American governor in the country.

"It was like looking in a mirror," Mohler-Faria said. Both were acutely aware the main difference in their lives that allowed them to succeed, he said.

"Education transformed our lives," said Mohler-Faria, who said he found a connection to Patrick, "and I think he saw the same in me."

Given their close ties, there has even been public speculation that Mohler-Faria may leave Bridgewater State to take on a full-time role in the Patrick administration. That speculation has been fueled by his recent hiring of a full-time chief of staff, Kendra Medville, who coordinated higher education study groups, and previously acted as a finance consultant for the new governor.

But Mohler-Faria flatly dispels such rumors, saying he plans to return to his full-time duties at the college this summer. His new chief of staff will assist him in preparing education advisory reports for the governor, attending meetings and collating the information from around the state.

Back to school

When he returned to Massachusetts from South Dakota, Mohler-Faira entered Cape Cod Community College, earning his associate's degree and taking a position in the college administrative office. It was that college's president, James Hill, who first suggested that he might do well with a career as an educator, and perhaps as a college president.

Mohler-Faira went on to Boston University, where he earned both his bachelor's and master's degrees in African-American Studies and U.S. History.

Then he juggled the commute between his family on Cape Cod, his work at Wachusett Community College, and earning his doctorate at UMass Amherst in 1984. Bryan Baldwin, Mohler-Faria's spokesman, joked that "he said he went through many cars."

Today, Mohler-Faira maintains that frantic pace. A hard person to catch up with, his days are timed precisely to the minute. But between train time, phone time and all that lays on his plate between work in Boston and Bridgewater, he still finds a few mornings every week to drive his 15-year-old son, Jonathan, to high school.

Sleeping usually about five hours a night, his day can begin as early as 4 a.m. Baldwin says it's not unusual to get an e-mail from the president written in the early hours of the morning.

"I get e-mail from him at all times of the day and night," he said.

Those who work with him describe him as a great humanist, and he takes his position very seriously, referring to his career as something other than a job.

"This is personal," he said. "This isn't a job or profession. I do what I have been called to do."

As for retirement, he doesn't appear to be thinking about that either.

"I think all of my life I will be engaged in education," he says.

He still has a lot of plans for Bridgewater State. For one, the college is now examining the possibilities of the college attaining university status. The change would bring university level courses to the school and funding from foundations for research to Bridgewater State.

Mohler-Faria has emphatically said, however, that "what we will not do is increase costs to students."

Dana Mohler-Faria

A big job

The position and responsibilities held by Mohler-Faria are daunting. He is responsible for the overall management and leadership of a 270-acre institution with approximately 10,000 students, 1,000-plus employees, 34 buildings, and an annual operating budget in excess of $100 million. He also has executive oversight of an academic program with 291 full-time faculty and four schools, is chief fundraiser for a private endowment of more than $15 million, and is principal institutional liaison to members of the Massachusetts General Court and executive departments.

The president maintains his involvement in Connect, a partnership of public higher education institutions in southeastern Massachusetts, which he founded.

His achievements are no less than remarkable. After taking the oath as president of the college in 2002, one of his goals was faculty expansion. He has managed to increase faculty by about 20 percent during his tenure, and hopes to bring the total to 340 by 2011 while holding the number of new students fairly constant.

He still lectures as often as he can at the college, where he worked for 11 years as vice president of administration and finance. It was during that time he negotiated a $7 million agreement with the MBTA that resulted in a direct link to Boston.

He also he developed fiscal controls at the college that earned him the praise of state auditors and arranged the purchase of the Dr. Albert Hunt Elementary School from the town, said Baldwin.

That he is working alongside the governor to bring about changes in Massachusetts education is like frosting on the cake to Bridgewater State student body and faculty - some of whom call him doctor, others call him Dana, and there are those who refer to him warmly as DMF.

It's not hard to understand how he was guided into his present position by following his own powerful mantra: "Work hard, invest in your education, and never forget the strengths and energies you can derive from your own family and community."

OBITUARIES

Thelma E. Caswell

Former kindergarten teacher

Thelma E. Caswell, 96, of Swampscott, died July 4, 2007, at Queen Anne Nursing Home in Hingham.

Born in Lynn, she was the daughter of the late Charles and Jenny Latter. She attended Lynn schools and graduated from Lynn Classical High School, Class of 1929.

Mrs. Caswell organized and was a teacher at Tiny Tot Kindergarten, located at First Methodist Church, and later at Christ Church United Methodist, for many years.

She was an active member at the First Methodist Church, which merged with St. Paul's Methodist Church and Christ Church United, later to become Grace United Methodist Church. She and her husband attended church regularly until Mrs. Caswell had trouble walking.

She was active in many other church and civic organizations, and served as president of Quid Nunc Circle at Christ Church United for several years.

Mrs. Caswell lived with her husband in their home in Swampscott until December 2006, when her health problems necessitated hospital or nursing home care. Her husband, 101, cared for her until his death in April 2007.

Wife of the late Howard T. Caswell Sr., she leaves her children, Priscilla D. Daniels of Cohasset and Howard T. Caswell Jr. of Franklin, N.H.; six grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; several nieces and nephews; and a sister-in-law, Dorothy Latter of Lynn.

Parker Funeral Home in Lynn handled the arrangements. Interment was in Pine Grove Cemetery.

Irene C. MacIver

Former waitress at Hugo's Lighthouse

Irene C. (Cummings) MacIver, 84, of Hingham, died July 22, 2007, at her home.

Mrs. MacIver worked at the Hingham Shipyard for the war effort during World War II as a riveter and ammunitions manufacturer. She had been a Hingham resident for 21 years.

She had been employed as a waitress at Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant in Cohasset and the Cozy Nook in Hull. She retired in 1984.

Mrs. MacIver was a member of the Ladies Auxiliary at the George Mealy Post in Cohasset.

Wife of the late Edmund H. MacIver, she leaves her children, Wayne J. MacIver of Kingston, Joyce M. Foster of Pembroke, Deborah A. (MacIver) Cornacchini of Dedham, Bruce D. MacIver of Hingham and Thomas R. MacIver of Hull; her sister, Phyllis Cummings of Quincy; nine grandchildren; and 11 great-grandchildren.

She was the mother of the late Warren E. MacIver, and the sister of the late Ethel Gebhardt and Leo Cummings.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m., on Friday, July 27, at St. Paul Church in Hingham. Visiting hours will be from 4 to 8 p.m., on Thursday, July 26, at Pyne Keohane Funeral Home, 21 Emerald St., Hingham. Interment in St. Paul's Cemetery, Hingham.

Memorial contributions may be made to American Cancer Society, Central New England Region, 18 Tremont St., #700, Boston, MA 02108.

Anne M. Hayes

Past member of the Cohasset Golf Club and CYC

Anne M. (Merrick) Hayes, 94 of Cohasset, died July 20, 2007 at the Life Care Center of the South Shore in Scituate.

Mrs. Hayes was born and raised in Boston. She graduated from Girl's Latin School in 1929 and went on to graduate from Emmanuel College in 1933. Mrs. Hayes then worked for Maginnis & Walsh Architects in Boston before marrying her late husband. Mrs. Hayes served as a former member of the Board of Trustee's for the South Shore Music Circus. She was also a past member of the Cohasset Golf Club and the Cohasset Yacht Club. Mrs. Hayes was also an avid gardener and truly enjoyed her garden. She also traveled extensively.

Wife of the late Attorney John J. Hayes, Jr., she leaves her children Roberta Macaya of Costa Rica, Attorney John J. III, of Boston & Beaune', France, Anastasia Hayes of Staten Island, N.Y., Kit Coffey of Cohasset, Gretchen Hayes Fenimore of Charleston, S.C.; a brother, David Merrick of Naples, Fla.; a sister, Kay Hannon of Noank, Conn.; seven grandchildren, Roman, Margarita, Alexandra, Anastasia, Montgomery, Alex and John, as well as nine great-grandchildren.

She was the sister of the late late Robert, Frank, John, Joseph and Ned Merrick and the late Alice Seridel.

A funeral Mass was celebrated on July 24, 2007 in St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset, handled the arrangements. Interment Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Donations in Mrs. Hayes' memory may be made to Fr. Waldron's "People In Need", St. Patrick's Church, 10 Magazine St., Roxbury, Ma 02119

Paul J. Thurlow

Member of Millwright Local 1121

Paul J. Thurlow, 71, of Scituate, formerly of Hingham, died July 20, 2007, at South Shore Hospital.

Mr. Thurlow served in the U.S. Army in the 11th Airborne Division in Korea. He had worked as a member of Millwright Local 1121.

He leaves his wife, Carole A. (Mulcahy) Thurlow; his children, Rachel E. Thurlow of Boston, Ann C. Connors of Norwood and Kaitlin B. Thurlow of Cohasset; and his grandchildren, William P. and Alison J. Connors of Norwood.

A memorial service was held at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Arrangements were handled by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Memorial donations may be made to Scituate Council on Aging, 27 Brook St., Scituate, MA 02066.

Judy Ogden to play Cohasset bells

The seventh Summer Series Recital on the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset will be presented Sunday evening, August 5th by Judy Ogden, carillonneur at Burton Tower, University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. She will play a varied program of compositions for carillon by Johan Wagenaar, Matthias Van den Gheyn and Ronald Barnes, transcriptions and arrangements of music by G. F. Handel, George M. Cohan and Jean-Joseph Mouret, and a group of familiar tunes.

The hour-long recital begins at 6 p.m., and is free of charge. It will take place regardless of weather conditions. In case of rain, the bells may be heard from your parked cars. Printed programs, schedules and brochures will be distributed on the Cohasset Common, and will also be available in a stand by the courtyard of St. Stephen's Church on Highland Avenue extension. Listeners are invited to bring chairs, blankets, and picnics to the common or the church courtyard. Following the program, the tower will be open to visitors for a demonstration by the carillonneur and a look at the bells.

Further information may be obtained by calling St. Stephen's Church at 781-383-1083, the Church Carillonneur, Sally Slade Warner at 978-475-2599, or the Assistant Carillonneur, Mary Kennedy at 781-383-9599.

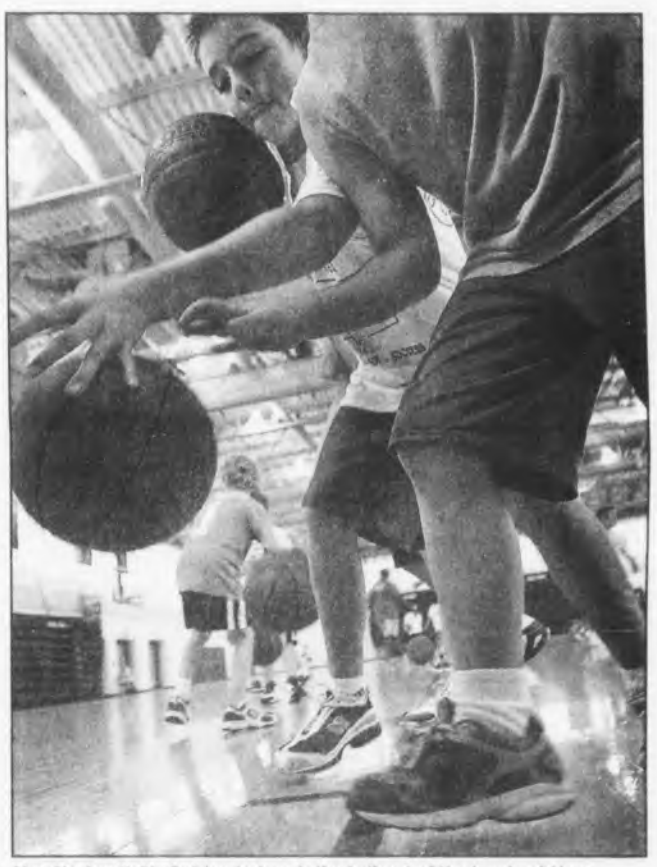
Hoopin' it up

Scenes from last Friday's basketball clinic at Cohasset High School, run by CHS Athletic Director Ron Ford.



Coach Dorian Bryant methodically lines up his shot while James Lydon, 13, hopes for a miss during a game of Knockout.

Above: Jack Speer, 8, finds himself in the midst of a forest of dribblers.

Musical scores a hit

Boston Pops salutes 'Oscar' and 'Tony'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When Maestro Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra take the stage at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset on Saturday night they will be joined by Broadway favorite Marin Mazzie.

"Our summer tour this year is in support of our latest album, 'Oscar and Tony: The Boston Pops Salutes the Best of Broadway and Hollywood,' which will be released on the Boston Pops label later this summer. We're doing music from an array of Academy Award-winning movies and Tony Award-winning Broadway shows of the last half-century including 'Ben-Hur' and '42nd Street,' which was both a hit movie in 1933 and the 1981 Tony Award winner for Best Musical," explained Lockhart by telephone from Tanglewood in Lenox last Friday. The great thing about having Marin Mazzie performing live with us is her amazing vocal repertoire. On this tour, we're able to balance our 'Salute to Oscar and Tony' with more Broadway music which Marin, of course, does so beautifully."

The Cohasset concert, which for the fourth straight year will benefit the South Shore Arts Center of Cohasset, will require Mazzie, a Tony Award-nominee for her performance in the 1999 revival of "Kiss Me Kate" whose other Broadway credits include "Passion," "Ragtime," to take time off from her current Broadway gig, playing the Lady of the Lake in "Monty Python's Spamalot."

"I'm missing two shows on Saturday. I fly to Boston in the morning, then I take a bus to Cohasset to do the Pops concert that evening. Right after the concert, I'm taking the bus back to Boston because I have a flight to New York first thing Sunday morning. I have a matinee and an evening performance of 'Spamalot' on Sunday. It is going to be one busy weekend."

Mazzie, who made her Boston Pops debut at the 1998 Fourth of July concert on Boston's Esplanade and has since appeared with the orchestra several more times, is so eager to work with Lockhart and company again that she doesn't mind juggling her Broadway schedule.

"There is just nothing else like singing with the most famous Pops orchestra in the world. I've known about the Boston Pops for my whole life and working with them is never less than thrilling," said Mazzie by telephone last week from her home in New York. "When I negotiated my 'Spamalot' contract, I made sure to have some 'outs.' I'm missing some shows this summer, but it is definitely worth it. I'll be doing some great songs in Cohasset, including 'So In Love' from 'Kiss Me Kate,' 'Losing My Mind' from 'Follies,' 'As If We Never Said Goodbye' from 'Sunset Boulevard,' and 'Everything's Coming Up Roses' from 'Gypsy.'"

Keith Lockhart will lead the Boston Pops in a musical tribute to Broadway and Hollywood, Saturday July 28 at the South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset.

Broadway sensation Marin Mazzie will perform with the Boston Pops and Keith Lockhart, at the South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset.

When selecting the award-winning movie music for the new album, Lockhart naturally turned to the catalogue of Boston Pops Laureate Conductor John Williams, the five-time Oscar winning film composer ("Jaws," "Star Wars," "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial") who preceded Lockhart on the podium.

"The Orchestra has done so much of John's music over the years and recorded a great deal of it, too. We talked to John, though, and decided that we would do a piece of music from 'Schindler's List' that has only been recorded once before, on the film's soundtrack."

Selecting Broadway music posed another kind of challenge.

"So much of contemporary Broadway, like 'Hairspray,' is not orchestral. We were able to include the overture from 'The Producers' and a few other things, but for the most part the album is skewed toward film."

On Aug. 26, Mazzie is slated to re-team with her "Kiss Me Kate" co-star, Tony Award-winner Brian Stokes Mitchell, for an all-Gershwin concert with the Pops at Tanglewood. Before Lockhart brings the orchestra back to its summer home, however, there are tour stops to be made in Hyannis, on Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, and in New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

The Pops fourth visit to the Music Circus is once again a benefit for the South Shore Arts Center in Cohasset. It is also a chance for Lockhart, who in 1995 became the 20th conductor of the Boston Pops since its founding in 1885, to bring the orchestra to visit thousands of its closest friends.

"In Cohasset, we'll be playing to very much a hometown audience. We tour farther afield to stay in front of people who maybe only know us from our albums and TV. The great thing about touring with the Pops, however, is that it always feels like we're playing to a hometown crowd even in Idaho, because everyone knows us from the Fourth of July concerts."

And Lockhart, who has also served as Music Director of the Utah Symphony since 1998, plans to keep it that way.

"We try to mix up the score over the course of our season, but always do 'Stars and Stripes Forever.' I don't think we'd be allowed off the stage without doing that one."

The Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra will appear at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset, on July 28. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org. A limited number of Pops Gala tickets, which for $300 per person include the concert and a Red Carpet-complete post-show party at the South Shore Arts Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, are available by calling 781-383-2787 or going online at ssac.org

'Talk' about a good film

"Talk to Me" (B+)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

A "Good Morning Vietnam" for the civil rights movement, "Talk to Me" tells a unique story in spite of that dangerously shopworn title. It is also an acting powerhouse driven by real-life American history of the 1960s, '70s and '80s.

At the epicenter of the film's pop cultural and political upheavals is its protagonist, the hilariously profane and provocative convict Ralph Waldo "Petey" Greene (Don Cheadle in an Academy Award-caliber, Richard Pryor-esque performance).

When we first meet Petey, he's in a closet off the warden's office, entertaining his fellow Washington, D.C.-area inmates at Lorton Penitentiary playing DJ on the prison PA system.

"Wake up!" is only one of Petey's galvanizing mantras. Petey's in jail doing "a nickel to a dime" (5 to 10 years). He wears a paisley ascot and waistcoat, outward signs of his idiosyncratic self. When Dewey Hughes (Chiwetel Ejiofor), the fiercely proud, radio-executive brother of an inmate, shows up on visiting hours, Petey accosts the young, handsome black man, calling him a Sidney Poitier wannabe, using much ruder terms, and demanding a job as a DJ when he gets out of the joint.

A short time later, Petey and his beloved Vernell (Taraji P. Henson of "Hustle & Flow"), looking ready to audition for "The Mack" and "Foxy Brown," respectively, arrive at WOL-AM in D.C., where the most popular DJ is a smooth operator known as the Nighthawk (Cedric the Entertainer). They proceed to wreak havoc. Most offended is station owner E.G. Sonderling (Martin Sheen), who is concerned about falling ratings and whom Petey irreverently nicknames "Blue Blazes" (Petey also nicknames Dewey, "Mr. Tibbs"). Soon, Petey is "the prophet of the streets," a Washington, D.C.-area radio legend and oracle.

Among his most notable achievements are helping to calm Washington, D.C., in the wake of the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and the imprint he left on shock jocks the world over. Among his worst are blowing a shot on "The Tonight Show" by deliberately insulting the audience and host Johnny Carson and drinking himself into oblivion.

Cheadle and Ejiofor are absolutely riveting in their roles. "Talk to Me" covers much the same ground as the overrated 2006 release "Dreamgirls" and is far superior to it. If "Talk to Me" has a flaw, it is that Petey is Petey from beginning to end. The character does not change much over time. The times change to accommodate him. I get that, but dramatically the lack of any character arc is a problem.

Still, everyone involved can be proud of "Talk to Me."

As Petey might say, raise your fists, y'all.

Rated R. "Talk to Me" contains objectionable language and sexual situations.

Washington D.C. deejay Petey Greene (Don Cheadle) always tells his listeners what's on his mind.

Auditions

THE BAY PLAYERS announce open auditions for the world premiere production of SEMMELWEIS, an original musical play, written by Joseph Shrand M.D. of Marshfield, and directed by Peter Kates of Norwell. Auditions will be held Monday, Aug. 13, and Tuesday, Aug. 14, from 7 to 10 p.m. at Furnace Brook Middle School, 530 Furnace St., Marshfield. Rehearsals will begin in September. Performances will take place in November, at the Furnace Brook Middle School in Marshfield. SEMMELWEIS is a poignant drama of medical and social intolerance, set in Vienna in the early 1850s. The cast includes five principal men, five principal women, one girl (8-10 years old) and a small chorus, which includes children as well as adults. Come prepared with a musical audition piece. This is your chance to be in on the creation of a new theatrical piece. For information, call 1-800-290-6825 or visit bayplayers.org or email info@bayplayers.org.

Classic Carlin

Comedian an authority on funny business

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

George Carlin

Much has changed about the world since George Carlin first burst onto the national scene in the 1960s with frequent stand-up comedy appearances on "The Ed Sullivan Show" and "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson." Fast forward 40 years, however, and Carlin — who plays the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset on Friday and the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis on Sunday — remains a fierce, and fiercely funny, counter-culture icon still telling it like he sees it.

"The American people aren't worth saving. Let's just start with that. When you're born in this world, you're given a ticket to the freak show. When you're born in America, you're given a front row seat," explained by Carlin recently by telephone. "My brother pointed out to me a long time ago that, when it comes to material, Americans will never let me down. He was right. They never have. America is a freak show, just a big goofy circus."

Since 1977, Carlin has offered up his observations of life under the big top in regular HBO specials, all 13 of which will be released in October in a DVD box set, "George Carlin: All My Stuff," to mark Carlin's 50th anniversary in show business. He's on tour now with material that will eventually be used in his next HBO special.

"In my current show, I'm talking about what people say and don't question — everything from secular beliefs to removing hats in church. I like to question authority."

The 70-year-old Carlin hasn't always just questioned authority; he's also had his share of run-ins with it. In 1972, he was jailed on indecency charges in Milwaukee after a show. Just a year later, Carlin's now legendary, and some might even say infamous, "Filthy Words" routine was aired on a New York radio station, resulting in the Federal Communications Commission filing obscenity charges against the station. A long legal battle ensued, eventually reaching the Supreme Court which upheld restrictions on broadcasting profanities when children were likely to be tuning in.

After a clean-shaven start in the 1960s, Carlin became a classic bearded, long-haired, earring-wearing hippy by the early 1970s. Over the years, his look has changed and so has his approach to his work.

"I used to always describe myself as a comedian who wrote his own material. Now I describe myself as a writer who performs his own material, not just a comedian. What I do is see the world, rethink it my way, and then give it back to my audience."

Carlin is well aware that his audience is often well aware of him.

"Thanks to HBO, I have hardcore fans from every era. I have to give them everything I have on stage, because for them the show they're at is the show they have been waiting for. You have to come out full of energy. You can't rest on the show you did the night before or the week before. It is the show you're doing right then that is most important."

With that in mind, three-time Grammy Award-winner Carlin is always certain to remain current. Doing that means work, something which doesn't bother the New York-born comic, actor, and author of books including "Braindroppings," "Napalm & Silly Putty" and "When Will Jesus Bring the Porkchops?."

While playing some 100 tour dates each year, Carlin often travels by limousines instead of planes so he can work on his laptop on the drive. He also carries a hand-held recorder with him at all times to capture his thoughts and ideas. Carlin also keeps more than 2,500 files on his computer, including jokes, which may or may not make it into his act and also material for his books.

"New material is how you last in this business. I have no hobbies or leisure activities that I enjoy. I read newspapers, magazines and the Internet to get a feeling for what it is people are being distracted by. I have curiosity in the distractions of everyday life," says Carlin. "My greatest joy is working at the computer with my ideas. What happens is when I'm on the computer, looking at files, things stand out. You just know what is a more pregnant idea or thought and you think, 'Wait 'til I tell them that.'"

George Carlin will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on July 27, at 8 p.m. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787, or go online at themusiccircus.org. Carlin will be at the Cape Cod Melody Tent, 21 West Main St., Hyannis, on July 29, for one show only at 5 p.m. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 1-800-347-0808, or go online at melodytent.org.

Avalon issued on-site discharge permit

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Avalon has hit a series of roadblocks in its pursuit of a 200-unit apartment complex planned for a 62-acre site off Route 3A. What to do with the wastewater generated from the site is one of the key issues of the development. On July 20, Avalon was issued a Department of Environmental Protection permit allowing for on-site wastewater treatment and groundwater discharge.

The final permit sanctions the discharge of treated sanitary sewage from the on-site wastewater treatment facility to the ground. However, because public comment was received during the draft permit period the permit will not become active until 30 days after issuance. This window allows for parties aggrieved by the issuance of this permit can appeal the decision.

Scott Dale, vice president of development for Avalon Bay, who could not be reached for comment this week, has said previously Avalon is still pursuing a connection to the town sewer system, regardless of the outcome with the on-site wastewater treatment permit. That matter is currently before the state Housing Appeals Committee, which handles 40-B issues. The appeals committee expects to have a decision in hand by the end of the year, Dale said.

Avalon, which is a "40-B" project, has a comprehensive permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals. Cohasset is vulnerable to 40-B projects, which have higher density than town bylaws allow because it has so little affordable housing.

Avalon considers it wise to pursue both options because either or both could face further appeal down the line, Dale said. The sewer issue is the final issue awaiting a resolution, once

Ticks be gone

Cohasset resident invents weapon against Lyme disease

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

There is the old adage that necessity is the mother of all invention, and in Debbie Cook's case it absolutely rings true.

Cook has spent the better part of a year working on developing an effective product to combat tick bites and the possibility of Lyme disease that comes with them.

Her interest was piqued when a neighbor said to her in passing, "practically everyone I know who has been walking in the woods has Lyme disease." That scary thought prompted her to begin searching for a tick-repelling product on the internet.

"There was nothing out there," save a chemical, Permethrin, a widely used crop pesticide available now in spray form for tick repellant. The spray, available at outdoor sport stores, could be directly applied to clothing.

"It's the most effective tick repellant on the market. They say it's safe, but I wouldn't want it right next to my skin," says Cook, "when it dries it becomes inert, but it is toxic to bees, other beneficial insects and fish."

In the meantime, Cook stopped walking in the 4,000 acre forest (Whitney/Thayer Woods and Wompatuck State Park) behind her King Street home, once a favorite activity, for fear of being bitten by a tick. She felt she had to be extra careful when gardening in the yard or going to see properties as a Conservation Commission member.

"I've had ideas, I think everyone does, but this was the first one I had ever followed through on."
— Debbie Cook, inventor

With all that in mind, she asked herself "what could I do?"

"I didn't want to be chased inside," says Cook.

It was then that Cook, who owns her own marketing and public relations business, decided to venture into the world of invention.

"I've had ideas, I think everyone does, but this was the first one I had ever followed through on," says Cook.

Her end product, Kick-a-Tick, now for sale on the web is a "weapon in the battle against Lyme disease." The 100

Turning plastic bags into stylish totes

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Plastic bags are everywhere — the grocery store, the shopping center, under the kitchen sink, at the Transfer facility and all too often stuck in trees, in the ocean and on the sides of the road. Imagine if someone could take those bags and turn them into something both useful and stylish.

Cohasset doesn't need to wait any longer, 24-year-old Ashley Ulmer is making sturdy and fashionable totes from those ubiquitous plastic bags.

A 2005 graduate from William College and a 2001 Cohasset High grad, Ulmer has devised a way to weave environmental and social consciousness into something new.

"It's quite snowy [in Western Massachusetts where Williams is located] so I developed a knitting and crocheting habit," says Ulmer, who had learned to do both from her grandmother when she was a little girl. When she took up the hobby again (with the help of a refresher course in the form of internet instructions), she discovered a new passion for it. However, she quickly realized how expensive knitting yarn was and her college budget couldn't handle the cost.

Because They Won't Tell You...
(And You Deserve To Know)

"How To Get Real (and lasting) Weight Loss and Fitness Results... As Quickly as Possible, With 100% Certainty"

Cohasset, MA - You want to get rid of the fat, lose the weight and have a great body so you look great and feel great. Like most, you've probably tried some things and they haven't worked. WHY? Because you are being lied to. The weight loss industry doesn't care about you – they care about profits. So they tell you what you want to hear. That it's" fast and easy if you just eat our food, take our pill, use our new-fangled gizmo, join our club." BULL! Like everything worthwhile in life, health and fitness results take effort. And cookie-cutter 'secret' solutions don't work. You know that already. (But are you willing to admit it?) If you want real results, as quickly as possible, with 100% certainty, there is only ONE solution that works every time: One-on-One personal training with a certified expert who designs a program specifically for you...and then holds you ACCOUNTABLE to following the program. If you really want what you say you want, then you're ready for the real solution. Here's your chance to get more details and try out the only real solution, with ZERO cost or obligation, if you respond immediately:

POLICE BEAT

Another bicycle mishap on the railroad tracks

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Bicyclists should probably avoid North Main Street by Woodside Cemetery. The angle of the tracks at the Greenbush grade crossing there has proved to be perilous on several occasions.

The front tires get stuck in the tracks, causing a bike crash and the rider to fall off.

"The big sign did not work and the little sign is no better."

— Chief James Hussey

Last Friday at about 1:30 p.m., a woman walked into the station to report that the day before she had gone over the tracks on her bike, fell and almost broke her shoulder. She said the small sign alerting bicyclists is poorly posted and not very visible.

Until permanent signs were installed, the MBTA was using a large lighted sign to alert cyclists.

"The big sign did not work and the little sign is no better," Chief James Hussey said. "Something has got to be done to the layout to force those on bicycles to cross the tracks at a 90-degree angle.

"We are well into the double figures for bike accidents at that location," he said.

Hussey said he believed a resolution for "safe passage" was in negotiation with the MBTA. "The way it is set up now, it does not work," he said.

Briefcase incident

The report of a briefcase left on the ground next to an unoccupied car with a cell phone inside in JJ's parking lot caused a stir last week. The call came in at about 10:20a .m. on Thursday (July 26) and the caller reported that the briefcase was on the ground outside the car and there was no one around.

Officers responded and ran the plate, which came back to a lawyer with an office on the North Shore. Police called the office but could not reach the lawyer because his cell phone was on the front seat in the parked car. However, the law office was later able to determine who the lawyer was scheduled to meet and called that attorney's office. As it turned out, the lawyer, who had left the briefcase and car at JJ's, had gotten into the other attorney's car to look at a nearby site. He apparently hopped in the other car and forgot his briefcase, Chief Hussey said.

Chain reaction

At about 11:40 a.m. on Friday (July 27) a chain reaction accident occurred at the lights at Upper King Street by Stop & Shop. A witness told police that a 2006 Honda, which had come to a complete stop, started moving forward when the 2002 Nissan in front of it moved forward. But then the Nissan stopped suddenly and the Honda then struck the Nissan, which then struck the 1998 Jeep that was first in the line of three cars.

No one was cited in the accident. The Honda and Nissan were both towed and the operator of the Nissan was transported to the hospital with non life-threatening injuries, police said.

Boat trailer

Police are investigating the theft of a gray boat trailer that was taken from the Parker Avenue landing area sometime from July 26-29.

The trailer owner discovered it missing on the 29th and reported it to police, Chief Hussey said.

Hussey said Cohasset police put a description and the trailer registration out to area towns and detectives are following up.

PHOTOS/MARY FORD

Traffic signs have replaced the illuminated signboard at the tracks by Woodside Cemetery and the Cohasset Golf Club. The first sign warns of an angled track ahead and the second sign, closer to the tracks, includes a diagram of a bicycle.

Old larceny

A man who had hoped to resolve the theft of some cash and sales receipts from his briefcase that was in his car with the alleged perpetrator has reported the larceny to police, Chief Hussey said. He came into headquarters last Wednesday (July 25) to report the incident that occurred on July 10. Hussey said the man thought he knew who was responsible and tried to make contact to have the money and receipts returned. He was unsuccessful and decided to report the incident, Hussey said.

Ongoing problem

Police will increase patrols at Shaw's Plaza to discourage youths from skateboarding there, Chief Hussey said. The manager at Walgreen's complained last week and said it was an "ongoing problem," according to the police log. Hussey said police try and stop kids from skateboarding where potential accidents can occur with pedestrians and motor vehicles.

Cemetery plants

After receiving a complaint from a resident about the theft of flowerpots at Woodside Cemetery, detectives will contact the DPW to determine if this is a reoccurring problem, Chief Hussey said. The resident who reported the theft said she called Woodside and was told that other things have also been reported missing. "We are going to speak to the cemetery folk to determine if there have been other thefts or vandalism taking place and if so, we will conduct an investigation," Chief Hussey said.

Missing money

A woman, who lives on Elm Street behind the police station, told police last week that a glass pitcher with a $10 bill and some change was missing from her apartment. She came to the station twice to report it, Chief Hussey said. The matter is under investigation.

Stop calling

A resident walked into the police station last Tuesday (July 24) to complain about receiving repeated calls about being involved in a minor motor vehicle accident which the walk-in said did not occur. The caller was identified through caller-ID. Police spoke with the person making the calls and explained the proper way to handle an accident is to come down to the station and make a report, Chief Hussey said. "That person has not made a report yet," he said.

Hide 'n' seek

Police believe that children playing hide 'n' seek banged on the window of a Linden Drive home upsetting the elderly resident, who reported that a housebreak was in progress last week. Units responded to the scene and checked the area, police said. "We think that kids were playing hide 'n' seek and somehow banged on the house," Chief Hussey said.

Phyllis Beeny is Cohasset's newest centenarian

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

AUGUST IS HERE

Hello Cohasset. Enjoy the month of August, which is amazing to me that it is here so quick. Take the time to enjoy every moment, big or little with family and friends. Not a lot of news to share this week as so many are enjoying vacations and time off but very happy and interesting news nonetheless.

OH BOY!

Anthony and Carlene Lanier would like to announce the birth of their son, Regulus Austin William Lanier, born at 1:23 p.m. on July 26, 2007 at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. He was 21-1/4 inches long and weighed 9 pounds and 9 ounces. As the third child, Regulus has two sisters, Alexandra, 8, and Calliope, 3.

Congratulations to a wonderful family on this very joyous news.

CENTURY CLUB

Congratulations to Cohasset's newest centenarian, Phyllis Beeny. Phyllis' special day was celebrated Tuesday at Harborview Apartments off Elm Street.

Father Liam V. Scanlan helps Phyllis Beeny, who has reached the 100-years-young mark, open a proclamation honor her from state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

About 35-40 of her friends and neighbors at Harborview helped Phyllis commemorate the occasion!

1972 REUNION

Cohasset High School Class of 1972 is planning a reunion for Oct. 26, 2007. More information is available at www.Classmates.com and will be updated regularly. We are trying to locate classmates. Please log on to the Classmates web site and become a member so that we can reach you and you can receive notice of updates. You can also contact the class at our email address, Tessahoc72@yahoo.com. If you are a friend or family member of a CHS 72 graduate who is out of the area, please pass this on!

ON A QUEST

Virginia Spofford, a Girl Scout here in Cohasset is holding a Historical Cohasset Quest Kickoff Event as part of her Girl Scout Gold Award. The event will be held on Aug. 15th from 10:30 a.m.-1 p.m. and will begin at the Community Center and end at the Historical Society. Refreshments will be provided and the quest takes about one hour to complete. For more information, contact Virginia at beeps56@hotmail.com

DEAN'S LIST

Congratulations go out to Rachel Doyle, Class of '08 at the University of Richmond in Richmond, Va., who made the dean's list the Spring '07. Rachel is majoring in Spanish and International Studies. To earn dean's list, students must earn a grade point average of 3.6 or higher. Rachel, your family and friends are all so proud of you, great job!

NEW BIKE

Christa Hagearty, president of Dependable Cleaners, has announced the final winners in the ninth annual Read to Ride summer reading incentive program. One of this week's contest winners was 9-year-old Morgan Fechter of Cohasset. Morgan will be entering the fourth grade at the Deer Hill Elementary School this fall. Her winning entry form was for reading "Night of the New Magicians" by Mary Pope Osborne.

Morgan is an avid reader and makes at least three trips a week to the Cohasset library. She enjoys reading historical fiction and her favorite books are from the "Dear America" series. This is Morgan's first time participating in Read to Ride. "It's wonderful that a local company is taking such a creative approach to instill a love of reading in our kids," said Linda, Morgan's mother. "The support and encouragement of Dependable Cleaners combined with the incredible library we have here in Cohasset is a winning combination for us."

Read to Ride offers children, ages 6 through 15, the chance to win a bike and helmet for every book they complete during the program. Two winners' names were drawn every Monday for seven consecutive weeks, from June 4 through July 23.

All news should come no later than Tuesday by 5 pm. Please send news to Mary Ford next week.

EMAIL: mford@cnc.com

Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street.

Morgan Fechter has won a bike through Dependable Cleaners Read to Ride program.

Two reads are better than one

Town-wide reading program set for fall

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Reading the first page of a new book is often like the first step of an adventure, you're not always sure where the journey will take you but you're ready for the ride. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will invite the citizens of Cohasset on a collective reading adventure this fall with a series of new programs called "Cohasset Reads Together."

Following on the success of the first ever town-wide reading program in the spring, One Book One Cohasset, the new program will feature programming geared to involve all ages.

A book selection committee consisting of library staff, school representatives, Town Manager, trustees and Friends of the Library representative got together to discuss the most appropriate book choice. Deciding two books were better than one, they chose a classic and a contemporary with similar (and complementary) themes: "Walden" by Henry David Thoreau and "A Walk in the Woods" by Bill Bryson.

"We liked the idea of a classic and a contemporary book and the fact 'Walden' was already on the high school reading list," says Library Director Jackie Rafferty.

"Walden" is a narrative following Thoreau's two-year stint in a log cabin beside Walden Pond in Concord, Mass. He uses his experience in a life of simplicity to expound on greater issues of wealth, money, nature, and spirituality.

"A Walk in the Woods" gives a 21st century perspective on America's cultural and geographical landscape as witnessed from hiking the Appalachian Trail. Rafferty says "A Walk in the Woods" is one of the more popular books for town-wide reading programs right now.

"The books are connected through their examination and celebration of the American wilderness," states the grant application. The subject matter of both books — nature — seemed to be a timely issue for the selection committee, with a rising focus on 'being green' in Cohasset and beyond, "it's a good time to read books about the environment," Rafferty says, "we wanted something that would resonate with the public."

The formation of Sustainable Cohasset and the Alternative Energy Committee are proof environmental issues are at the forefront of discussion throughout the town.

"The Cohasset Reads Together program provides the impetus for community interaction and the opportunity for people to come together and share ideas," says Rafferty, "not to mention appreciate great literature."

The library programming will strive to include a cross section of Cohasset residents, young children, high school aged students, environmental groups and older readers. The program coincides with the library's greater mission to promote a love of reading and the pursuit of knowledge.

"Libraries are often a form for public discourse," says Rafferty and she hopes the Cohasset Reads Together will strengthen that role in our community.

Cohasset Reads Together is made possible by a $7,500 federal Library Service Technology Act grant awarded to an "On the Same Page" town-wide reading program. The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners selected Cohasset's application after a competitive process. The library staff wrote the grant application, wrote the grant and will be running the program.

The Friends of the Library funded the One Book One Cohasset program in the spring.

"We would like to have a town wide reading program frequently," said Rafferty, although available funding may dictate the possibility.

Rosano Triangle passes site plan review

Route 3A safety concerns paramount

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A packed gravel parking lot with room for 10 cars is proposed, a change from the original 19-space paved lot. The remaining green spaces of the site will be loamed and seeded, with some low-lying shrubs and maple trees.

The Rosano Triangle, long a site for excess earth materials, has received Planning Board site plan conditional approval for a mixed-use building at last Wednesday's meeting (July 25). The debated site, located in the junction of Lower King Street, Chief Justice Cushing Highway and Rosano Lane (formerly an extension of Crocker Lane), has plans for a roughly 1,500 square foot building with medical/professional offices on the first floor and one residential apartment unit on the second floor. The vote was 3-1, member Bob Sturdy was not present.

The decision comes after a series of informal meetings over the last month and a half. Joseph Rosano, owner of the property, ended up in front of the Planning Board after his building permit expired. The Building Inspector refused to renew the permit until he got a ruling from the Planning Board on whether it needed a site plan review. Rosano contested he had gone through hearings with the Zoning Board of Appeals back in 2005 and was never told a site plan review was required.

After several lengthy and at times heated debates on the matter, the Planning Board determined in a split vote a full site plan review was required at a meeting in early June. The Planning Board contended (and Town Counsel agreed) a site plan review was required because of its location in a commercial district, although it is zoned residential.

"We're looking at this as a fresh start," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore after references to earlier discussions crept into the site plan review. The project engineer Neil Murphy walked the Planning Board through the plans.

A packed gravel parking lot with room for 10 cars is proposed, a change from the original 19-space paved lot. The remaining green spaces of the site will be loamed and seeded, with some low-lying shrubs and maple trees. The Planning Board requested a full landscape plan to be put on file.

The Planning Board also requested an irrigation system be installed on the site. Their experience with other Route 3A developments taught them the greenery does not survive the hot dry summer without a sprinkler system.

"It will be the best return for you investment. It's a showcase location, [the irrigation system] will reap you volumes at harvest time," said Vice Chairman Bill Good, naming Rosano's parcel as one of the most visible in town. In recent history, the Planning Board has required Route 3A development to install irrigation, said Good. Despite Rosano's protests at the cost of the system, the Planning Board was in agreement it was in the best interest of the development and made it a condition.

Central to the discussion was Rosano Lane, which will remain a curb cut onto Route 3A. The lane cannot be closed off because several parties have a legal easement over the property and do not want to give it up. In the last month, Rosano contacted each of the easement holders to ask if they would be willing to give up their rights, none were willing.

"The applicant has done everything we have asked," said member Michael Westcott, referring to the several informal meetings leading up to the site plan review where the Planning Board had made requests of Rosano, including contacting the easement holders.

"Apart from Rosano Lane, there will be no exit onto Route 3A," said Murphy. The exit to the parking lot will be on the King Street side of the parcel, "you can't get into and out of parking lot through Rosano Lane."

The design incorporates elements to make clear the private status of Rosano Lane, "we're going to leave it rough and graveled to let everyone know it's a private lane," said Rosano. Curbing will not delineate the eight-foot wide lane.

Despite these precautions, member Stuart Ivimey had reservations, "I'm not interested in encouraging anyone using that right of way as a cut-through to come onto 3A or as a means to access the parking lot." In addition, Ivimey was concerned that over time people will start to enter and leave the building's parking lot over Rosano Lane for direct access to 3A.

"I don't think the applicant made adequate provisions for ensuring that 3A will never be used as a means for entering or exiting the property. For very little effort the applicant should be required to ensure the safety of people who travel on 3A and the people who will use his building," Ivimey explained in a phone interview.

At the meeting, he suggested a fence be placed at both ends of Rosano Lane, as well as along the lane to separate the parking area and the private lane. Keys would be given to those parties with easements. The remaining members did not think this measure was necessary.

"I don't think we are exacerbating the situation with this site plan," said Moore.

Ivimey's safety concerns on Route 3A prompted him to cast the sole 'nay' vote for the Rosano Triangle building. The "accelerated development" of that stretch of Route 3A, from the MBTA station to the proposed Avalon site across from Good Sport, was Ivimey's major concern. How the Rosano development would fit into the greater design and traffic schemes of the area was, in Ivimey's opinion, largely unknown. A traffic light is proposed at the intersection of Lower King Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway, just south of the Rosano building. The MBTA station and the proposed TOD shopping plaza located north of the site will generate more traffic than ever before.

At their meeting on Wednesday night, the Planning Board reviewed the written decision for the project. After a 20-day appeal period, a building permit will be issued. Rosano expects to begin construction soon after.

"It's not like he has to do any demolition," quipped Moore.

Cohasset Land Foundation acquires Ingram property

Cohasset Land Foundation has announced the acquisition of approximately 40 acres of property from Osborne Ingram on July 31. The organization has worked with Ingram, his family and abutters, as well as town boards and the selectmen, to prepare a plan that meets the town's needs and preserves as much open space as possible.

The agreement sets aside more than 26 acres of conservation land that will be preserved as open space through ownership by Cohasset Conservation Trust Inc., and named George M. Ingram Park. The upcoming sale of three approved, two-acre, single-family home lots will fund the acquisition and the investments made by the CLF. These lots have undergone rigorous review by the Conservation Commission, Planning Board, Board of Health and the Board of Selectmen and have approved site, drainage, septic and shared driveway designs with frontage on Norman Todd Road. Six of the 40 acres were simultaneously sold to the Vedanta Center for their stewardship as open space.

The Cohasset Land Foundation is a public/private partnership founded to assist the town in identifying, acquiring, preserving and appropriately developing parcels of land of special interest in a manner consistent with the goals outlined in the 2003 Cohasset Master Plan. The CLF is modeled after a successful organization established in the town of Lincoln.

The agreement sets aside more than 26 acres of conservation land that will be preserved as open space through ownership by Cohasset Conservation Trust Inc., and named George M. Ingram Park.

Rick Swanborg and Tom Callahan from the Cohasset Land Foundation; Kathleen R. Hollum and Dr. Susan Schrager from the Vedanta Center; Dick Avery from the Cohasset Conservation Trust; and Osborne Ingram.

The organization seeks further opportunities with local landowners and estates to "save what needs to be saved and develop what needs to be developed" to meet the towns future needs.

For information, call Rick Swanborg, chairman of CLF, at 781-383-2783 or email swanborg@icex.com.

Bikes beware

There is a lot to think about when it comes to Greenbush train service that is expected to begin the end of September.

Police are taking a zero-tolerance policy about trespassing along the right of way. That means violators could be fined and arrested. It is a safety issue and when it comes to the awesome power of a train barreling down the tracks – police and firefighters do not want to have to be called to a preventable accident.

Test trains are scheduled to start next week and from that point on, trains are going to be a part of our lives.

There is a safety issue, however, that – to our knowledge – has yet to be resolved.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we go over the police log every week and highlight items of interest to discuss with Chief James Hussey. We have a telephone interview with the chief every Tuesday or Wednesday during which he answers questions and explains details behind the incidents we are inquiring about.

In the log on most weeks, a bicycle accident on the tracks that cross North Main Street near the Cohasset Golf Club and Woodside Cemetery is reported. At that location, the tracks cross the street at an angle which can trap bicycle tires. When this occurs the unsuspecting bicyclist is thrown off the bike.

Last week a woman came into the police station to report that she fell off her bike at that grade crossing and almost broke her shoulder.

Chief Hussey told us the numbers of bicyclists injured at that grade crossing is now into the "double digits."

He believes there are negotiations going on with the MBTA about how to make the area safer so that bicycles can cross the tracks at a 90-degree angle.

Many of you may remember the large, illuminated portable signboard that was posted there for months, alerting bicyclists to walk their bikes across the tracks. Those signs have been removed and replaced with permanent, yellow diamond-shaped traffic signs warning those on bicycles to the danger.

The problem is that many people are not going to see the signs. There is a lot to be concerned about when riding a bicycle, not the least of which is regular automobile traffic. Someone on a bike, who is unfamiliar with the danger, could easily miss the new signs and ride onto the tracks at the grade crossing to his or her peril.

That particular stretch of road is beautiful and peaceful. There is little reason for an unsuspecting bicyclist to think about danger within the track layout itself.

In our view, this grade crossing is an engineering disaster and something needs to be done sooner rather than later.

It does not make sense that MBTA officials would allow this dangerous situation to continue.

Train reflection

We would love to hear from Cohasset residents who commuted on the Greenbush line before service was abandoned in 1959. We will be putting together a "special section" this fall on the train.

If you have stories to share or suggestions about what you would like to read about, please contact us. If anyone has train photos or memorabilia that could be shared, we would like to hear from you!

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Cohasset Golf Club Women 'hit one for a cause'

TO THE EDITOR:

On July 24, 32 tennis players and 47 golfers from the Cohasset Golf Club rallied to raise more than $10,000 for breast cancer research. The dual tournaments benefited "Play for PINK" – Prevention, Immediate diagnosis, New technology, Knowledge, a nonprofit organization dedicated to funding innovative clinical and genetic research and to promoting awareness of breast cancer issues. One hundred percent of the tournament fees and raffle proceeds will go directly to breast cancer research. For information on the Breast Cancer Research Foundation's grants made possible by support from Play for PINK, see playforthepink.org.

The Play for PINK Committee would like to thank our generous raffle donors:

Treat's Pond as a Trojan Horse

COMMENTARY

CHRIS EVANS

If Treat's Pond is to be connected to salt water, the natural and obvious way to do so is via Sandy Cove, an adjacent private property owned by some of the same people who are pushing the "restoration" project.

Later this year Cohasset taxpayers may be asked to foot a bill of $400,000 or more to convert Treat's Pond into a saltwater marsh. Although this will probably be presented as a conservation measure, critical thinkers might be excused for asking whether the true intent lies elsewhere. Specifically, is this a Trojan Horse for obtaining public money to improve and protect private property belonging to a small number of well-connected, well-organized and well-heeled stakeholders? Consider the following:

As pointed out by Mr. Whittemore (Mariner, July 20), Treat's Pond has not been a salt marsh in living memory and, indeed, may never have been one at all. The relatively new appearance of phragmites in the pond reflects the rapid expansion of this reed in the latter 20th century rather than a recent conversion of the pond from salt to fresh water as claimed by Mr. Houghton (Mariner, July 27).

If Treat's Pond was never a salt marsh, it cannot be "restored" to this state and the Army Corps of Engineers (ACE), who are backing this project, cannot legitimately perform the work under their Salt Marsh Restoration mandate.

If Treat's Pond is to be connected to salt water, the natural and obvious way to do so is via Sandy Cove, an adjacent private property owned by some of the same people who are pushing the "restoration" project. The ACE have conveniently ruled out this potential disturbance to the beach at Sandy Cove, perhaps taking heed of the Sandy Cove Association's concerns about aesthetics and the safety of small children and pets. Instead, the ACE favor longer and expensive routes that connect Treat's Pond to Cohasset harbor.

The ACE's first choice is to discharge the effluent from Treat's Pond into the inner harbor. This is partly justified by esoteric mathematical modeling based upon the erroneous assumption that Cohasset harbor is a single, homogeneous body of water that completely flushes twice a day with the tide. Increasing evidence suggests that this is a false assumption.

Part of the problem with Treat's Pond results from leaky septic systems. Instead of discharging the offending waste material into the harbor, it seems prudent to allow the forthcoming sewering of this area to take effect.

Flooding is an issue for several of the houses in the vicinity of Treat's Pond. The proposed "restoration" work is expected to address this problem, but there are other, more deserving recipients of this type of help. The long-suffering residents of Elm Street who abut Jacob's Meadow come instantly to mind.

The Cohasset Harbor Health Committee voted unanimously against the Treat's Pond "restoration" project. The Storm Water Committee convened to discuss the issue, but under its conflicted yet unrecused chairman the meeting broke up in acrimonious disarray.

At a time when there are insufficient funds to satisfy the requirements of Cohasset's public services and the town is projecting a possible $410,000 shortfall for next year's budget (Mariner, July 13), it goes against every decent and civilized notion of fair play to expect Cohasset residents to spend their tax money on private property to which they have no legal access.

The demise of our sycamore

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

This past Tuesday our sick stately sycamore tree was removed from the Town Parking Lot because we felt that it posed a hazard to the train and cars parked in the lot. This fall we will be planting a similar tree in the same place. A new tree will have a substantially better chance of accommodating to its parking lot environment than the old weakened tree. And, the fall is a good time for planting after the summer droughts have passed.

Still more on James Brook – In this issue we will be discussing Jacobs Meadow. You may remember, from our previous articles, that both James and Stewart brooks gather storm water from Castle Road on the Scituate side of Town, and from as far as Lower King Street on the Hingham end of Town. These brooks then deliver the storm water to Jacobs Meadow so it can be released to the harbor when the tides are favorable. But, there are several unique things we must keep in mind:

- Jacobs Meadow is mostly private land. It is two-thirds owned by the abutters. The Town owns that other one-third. The only way any work can be conducted in the meadow is with the approval of all of the landowners.
- Jacobs Meadow's historic environment, as near as we can tell, is as a salt marsh. At one time, the marsh was open to the harbor and the salt water could freely flow into and out of the marsh with the tides.
- According to FEMA maps, Jacobs Meadow is in a flood plain with elevations as low as 3 feet above sea level.
- Over the years abutters have reclaimed marsh area and converted it into "yard."

So where does this leave us? We know that the meadow is no longer a healthy salt marsh. The invasion of phragmites, a fresh water reed, is proof of this. Phragmites just can't survive in a salt-water environment. In an attempt to arrest the phragmites growth, several years ago, the marsh was dredged. The dredging spoils were simply piled up on the banks of the dredged channels, acting as dikes that prevent the salt water from spreading across the marsh area.

At the same time, new development in Town over the years, within the watershed areas, has increased the impermeable areas. This of course, increases the storm water in the Town brooks and consequently in Jacobs Meadow. Additionally, large rainfalls seem to be a more frequent occurrence.

We at Town Hall have received numerous complaints from residents ranging from potential building damage to basement water intrusion as well as plants and trees dying. Some of the resident complaints have obvious solutions, while others do not. Recently the Town hired a civil engineer to work with some of the residents to understand the more serious complaints dealing with structural damage. We are really trying to understand the mechanisms at work on specific properties so that we can develop an effective engineered solution, which can then be blended into a more general solution.

In a general sense, it seems that the Town may need to do a detailed engineering analysis of the meadow. If the outfall channel improvement that we spoke about last week can be effected, then we will have the ability to get more storm water to the harbor and, likewise, get more salt water into the meadow. Based on the detailed engineering analysis, the meadow can then be re-graded so that the salt water flowing from the harbor to the meadow can cover a much greater portion of the meadow. This will control the phragmites spread. At the same time, regrading may offer the opportunity to hold storm water awaiting its release to the harbor in such a way that it reduces the impact on abutters' properties. As always, the solution only requires money. At the present time the Town is positioning itself to be in a favorable position for grants to assist with the needed analysis and a long-term solution.

The stately sycamore tree posed a hazard to cars parked in the lot and was removed.

Forest Avenue – The lack of construction the first part of this week probably gave the Forest Avenue resident a false sense of calmness and well-being. By the time you read this, heavy construction activity should have started again. Thursday and Friday of this week are scheduled for road grinding from N. Main Street to where the previous grinding ends. The following Monday through Thursday will be used for leveling the newly ground roadway, removal of excess material and rolling the surface to the proper contours. If everything goes perfectly, the first coat of paving should be put down next Friday. However, we all know that construction projects often have minds of their own and become delayed. So, the end of this week, all of next week and possibly into the following week might be very rough going in the area.

At the same time, another contractor will begin working removing the top paving layer on the Jerusalem Road end of Forest Avenue. The process to be employed on this portion of Forest Ave., called cold planing, will be nowhere as disruptive as the work on the rest of Forest Ave. Only the top two inches of old asphalt will be removed, still leaving a rough but passable asphalt surface for drivers. But, there will still be heavy machines and lots of trucks and construction equipment for this operation.

And lastly, the blasting contractor will begin their pre-blast survey work in preparation for removing the last knob of ledge near the N. Main Street end of Forest Avenue. The blasting should follow after the necessary permits have been obtained from the Fire Department.

So, the upshot is please, please drive slowly and safely! And, don't use Forest Ave. unless you absolutely need to.

Campaign trail humor

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Back in the 1992 presidential campaign, when Republicans were beating up on Bill Clinton for his cozy relationship to Gennifer Flowers, someone in the Democratic camp suggested that George Bush may have had a Jennifer of his own, his secretary, Jennifer Fitzgerald Tillotson.

But the rumormongers hadn't counted on Barbara Bush, the candidate's wife, who knocked that one out of the park amid gales of laughter.

The best political humor is that in which the joke is on the candidate himself.

"How could George Bush have an affair?" she asked. "He can't stay up past 10 o'clock!"

George failed to win that election but it wasn't because Barbara didn't try to help him by injecting a little defensive humor into what promised to become the cesspool of nasty charges and recriminations that passes for presidential politics today.

A Gallup Poll conducted for USA Today the other day showed that American voters would like to see more humor in politics — 43 per cent of those polled said humor is very important, 40 per cent that it is somewhat important. Only 16 per cent thought it was not too important or not important at all.

The best political humor is that in which the joke is on the candidate himself.

It was no secret that Ronald Reagan, who was in his 70s when he lived in the White House, had a habit of dozing off during cabinet meetings and he couldn't help but note it when he prepared to leave the Oval Office.

"As soon as I get home to California," he said, "I plan to lean back, kick up my feet, and take a long nap. Come to think of it, things won't be that different after all."

The nation was just getting over globe-trotting First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt when Bess Truman may have picked up a few votes for her husband, Harry, by telling reporters: "A woman's place in public is to sit beside her husband, be silent, and be sure her hat is on straight."

I keep looking for humor in the current campaign and find it a scarce commodity.

The best was unintentional. Or was it? Whatever, it belongs to Hillary Clinton, who was asked in Davenport, Iowa, how she was equipped to deal with the world's dictators. She repeated the question: "What in my background equips me to deal with evil and bad men?" Then she grinned. The audience howled.

Joe Biden, the Democratic candidate who is noted for his long-winded speeches and answers, was asked by MSNBC's Brian Williams: "Can you reassure voters in this country that you would have the discipline you would need on the world's stage?"

"Yes," said Joe and it was a few minutes before the audience got the joke.

Rudy Giuliani, the Republican candidate, was asked a question about his difficulties with Catholic authorities when there was a clap of thunder and a flash of lightning and his microphone went dead.

"For a person who went to parochial schools all his life," he said, "that is a very frightening thing."

Hillary, Joe and Rudy drew laughs for their attempts at campaign humor. But George Bush, the current one, found that it can turn on you if you are not careful. At the White House correspondents' dinner in 2004, he showed a video of himself searching the Oval Office.

"Those weapons of mass destruction have got to be somewhere," he said.

No one thought it was funny.

Tales of a Suburban Fashionista

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

...I still try to be a bit fashion forward on occasion, even though here in suburbia-land there's a very fine line between cutting edge fashion and "what was she thinking?"

I'm an admitted Fashionista. This means that I never read women's magazines for dating or housecleaning tips (maybe that explains a lot?). Instead, I focus on the fashion. Perhaps that's why I can reconcile my purchasing these magazines despite the horrible messages about body image that they convey. I never really notice the bodies underneath, just the clothes.

It's like the time my friend was fretting over her daughter's Barbie obsession and how much damage it would do to her psyche. I tried to console her with the fact that I, too, played with Barbie as a child and seemed to have escaped relatively unscathed. Unfortunately, I unwittingly destroyed her brief sense of hope when I went on to ask, "Does she play house?" Or worse, "Hotel heiress?" Because then that would be completely different. You see, I was playing Project Runway long before Heidi Klum even invented the concept.

So, while it doesn't always fit my present lifestyle, I still try to be a bit fashion forward on occasion, even though here in suburbia-land there's a very fine line between cutting edge fashion and "what was she thinking?" Add to this the fact that I'm a reluctant shopper at best, and it's a bit difficult to feed my passion for fashion. This is why on my annual trip to my parent's place in the South of France, I take one morning and hit the shops. After all, it's easier to enjoy the experience when everyone dresses beautifully and even flea market finds are fashionable.

This year, upon arrival at my parent's home, I plowed through all the UK fashion mags I could get my hands on (far superior to their US counterparts), and watched a few segments of French FashionTV and then I was off. First new "must have" on my list: an adorable A-line/empire-waist brightly colored sundress.

At Naf-Naf (a French version of H&M), I grabbed a yellow one off the rack. Two minutes later, I was aghast to see in the changing room mirror that I didn't look anything like the models in the magazines. In fact, I bore a striking resemblance to Big Bird from Sesame Street. Hmmm. The last thing I want on my vacation is children chasing me down the street singing "Sunny day, sweeping the clouds away ..."

Thinking it was the color, I tried on a white one. This time I looked like a pregnant stork. If it had been pink, I could just imagine the jokes about my "flamingo legs", a nickname I'd earned at the zoo, when my then three-year-old son pointed to a flock of flamingoes and announced for all to hear, "Look Mommy, they have legs like you!"

So much for that trend. Next? Metallic shoes and bags? Definitely not happening for this gal. Way too "New Jersey 1985." Scarf-dresses? I can't tie a scarf around my neck, let alone my body. Much too complicated, and I don't even want to think about what type of undergarments would be required.

Then there was the boy-shorts bathing suit I just had to try on. Unfortunately, a "Scarlett Johannson-esque" French girl, 20 years my junior was also trying on the same suit. As we stood next to each other in from of the mirror, she looked "tres magnifique." Et moi? Not so much (more like Skipper, Barbie's tomboy sister). Alas, yet another fashion trend to pass me by.

Noticing my disappointment, the shopkeeper, as only a French shopkeeper will do, looked me up and down with a critical eye and announced "Non!" She then grabbed a bikini off a nearby rack and tossed it, and me, back into the dressing room. Voila! She had found the perfect suit.

As I paid, I recalled my previous year's quest for sunglasses. I really wanted big black Jackie O-type glasses that were all the rage. But, the gorgeous French sales guy talked me into an aviator-styled pair. As he put it "Do you want to be fashionable; or do you want to look beautiful?" (Insert sexy French accent, and the fact that at that moment I wanted to be anything he wanted me to be!) And, he was right. The pair he suggested looked much better on me; and while it's more J. Lo than Jackie O, I was thrilled to see the same sunglasses advertised in UK Vogue a few months later.

My French lesson for the summer? Sometimes we can be the most fashion forward when not following fashion at all.

HEALTH NOTES

Make yourself unattractive to bugs

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It's the latest buzz in the health business: Become less attractive to bugs. From hospital rooms to nature paths and gardens to the kitchen sink, the new mantra is to create around yourself and your surroundings an environment in which threats to your health and comfort find it difficult or at least less preferable to exist.

Last week, we talked about increasing vigilance and the need to avoid conditions that may cause illness. But with today's fast-paced activity schedule, it's easy to run into conditions where you have to expose yourself to something harmful.

Take ticks, mosquitoes and sunlight, all of which we have mentioned earlier. Threats to our health requiring diligence are next to impossible to avoid all the time. The new tools to cope with conditions you regularly encounter are not lotions or sprays to cover unprotected skin, but things to wear. Shirts are now available with sun protection factors (SPF) on the label. Covers put over shoes, which ticks disdain, and, according to Debby Cook, creator of a permethrin-laced legging, most of a tick's life is spent on the ground, waiting for a host, either human or an animal. Only in the fall, around October, do ticks climb up grasses and vegetation, waiting up to 3 feet high to latch onto larger mammals and humans. Other treated clothing is available from sport shops and apparel stores. Permethrin repels both ticks and mosquitoes, and according to one source, the clothing is still effective after 25 washings. Moreover, the repellent is available from sports and specialty stores in liquid form as an additive to be applied to clothing, hats, etc. To find sources for both clothing and repellent for application to apparel, Google: insect repellent clothing.

Techniques are available to protect yourself in other venues as well. Public places, toilets, health care facilities, park benches and even hospitals can all be sources of harmful bacteria. Older generations are sometimes surprised at the lengths to which modern mothers go to protect their children, and not without purpose. The environment in which we now live is at once cleaner and healthier than at any time in the past. Children in 1940 could expect to have boils, ringworm, mumps and countless other maladies, most of which are now oddities. Similarly, they could generally eat peanuts without consideration and seldom dealt with autism, now major problems with many modern children.

Perhaps the most insidious problem to be faced with the new health threat dilemma is in health care institutions. Although we are constantly learning about outbreaks of MRSA (methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus), at hospitals, until recently, the environment has not played a significant role in the transmission of MRSA. MRSA and other bacteria are transmitted most frequently by direct contact. You can therefore protect yourself from infections by practicing good hygiene (e.g., keeping your hands clean by washing with soap and water or using an alcohol-based hand rub and showering after working out), covering any open skin area such as abrasions or cuts with a clean dry bandage; avoiding sharing personal items such as towels or razors; using a barrier (e.g., clothing or a towel) between your skin and shared equipment; and wiping surfaces of equipment before and after use. It is only recently that hospitals have come to realize that more rigorous methods of sanitation are becoming necessary by sanitizing stethoscopes, door handles and other public contact surfaces. The use of alcohol wipes is increasing around health care facilities. And you can play a part in such activities. Always be conscious of what and who you touch. Wear clothing that shows stains if contacted by liquids, and make a packet of alcohol wipes a part of your protection system.

You're now decked out in a shirt that's marked SPF 50, your shoes are covered with insecticide soaked protective leggings and out of your pocket is an alcohol wipe. Unattractive, but ready.

Free legal clinic

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring a free legal clinic as a public service to the community. A panel of attorneys experienced in all areas of the law will be available for a one-on-one consultation with you to discuss your legal questions. All consultations, which are strictly confidential, will be held from 6 to 8 p.m., Tuesday, Aug. 14, at Quincy District Court. For information call Adrienne C. Clarke at the Bar Association of Norfolk County at 617-471-9693.

Work in progress on drafting Village zoning bylaw changes

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Within in the past few years, Cohasset Village has endured multiple construction projects. Even this summer, the repaving of Elm and Brook streets disturbed the course of normal business. With a goal of keeping retail vital and establishing parameters of what's possible in the village business district, new zoning bylaws will be set forth at the fall special Town Meeting.

Concord Square Development Company working in conjunction with the Planning Board is currently reviewing preliminary development of the bylaws. For two consecutive meetings Angus Jennings, principal for Concord Square, has come before the Board to get feedback and direction on his zoning drafts. The bylaw development is the most immediate focus because a final draft needs to be completed by Sept. 1.

"We're still a full month away from having the bylaws considered in a public hearing process," advises Jennings, which means everything is still subject to change as the draft bylaws are vetted at Planning Board and other meetings.

At last year's special Town Meeting, $30,000 was earmarked to hire a village consultant to determine possibilities for the village district. After a Request for Proposals process in the spring, Boston-based Concord Square Development Company was hired by the town to develop a village master plan and advise in the creating and changing of zoning bylaws. A $25,000 Priority Development grant from the state Department of Housing and Community Development boosted the project. The additional funds allowed the expansion of the project's purview to include architectural renderings, a more detailed design guidelines and a market analysis.

Proposed bylaw changes will likely deal with procedural and design bylaws. Planning Board members were in agreement at their July 25 meeting that they would like to see their board as the permit granting authority for future village development.

"It makes for a strong incentive for developers to propose something within the rules," because then only one stop is necessary in the permit process, said Jennings. If a developer proposed something outside the zoning bylaws, they would have to go before the Zoning Board of Appeals as well.

The proposed design bylaws will be specifically crafted, with some only applying to certain areas of the village.

"We call them surgical changes. They'll be very specific, as not to have any unintended consequences," said Jennings.

One of the areas of focus is the buildings bordering the town parking lot on both Main Street and Depot Court. The bylaw will be written so buildings that abut the municipal parking lot are encouraged to establish a village atmosphere and appearance on the land facing the parking lot.

Concord is also recommending, with the support of the Planning Board, a more uniform regulation for buildings, regardless of use.

"Encouraging a mix of uses is the right way to go," said Jennings. This could mean the removal, or at the very least change, of the 40,000 square foot lot size that currently constricts apartment development.

Establishing a bylaw defining a floor area ratio for the village business district is a recommended action by Concord. A floor area ratio is the relation between lot size and building floor space. The purpose is to limit the amount of development on a given piece of land, said Jennings at the July 25 Planning Board meeting.

For example, a 1.2 ratio would allow a 10,000 square foot lot to have a 12,000 square foot building. Jennings and his team are currently looking into at the average floor area ratio in the village now, to determine an appropriate ratio going forward.

Other changes will only be slight housekeeping changes, "the changes will be consistent with the intent but currently are not clear in the bylaw," said Jennings.

The public process is paramount in this project, and Jennings' team appreciates the input concerned citizens, merchants and village property owners have given them in the project so far.

Public involvement will continue with a design workshop with the Concord, and its consulting civil engineer, architects and market analyzer to be held at Saturday, Aug. 18 from 9a.m. to 12p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium.

Jennings plans to have the architects take the draft bylaw and apply it to three village parcels to show what the new zoning bylaws could allow.

"People can really see if they are comfortable with [the possibilities]," said Jennings. The drawings will be only mock-ups, but will allow residents to visualize the proposed zoning bylaw changes.

All zoning bylaw changes and additions require a two-thirds majority vote at Town Meeting to be entered into the books.

Cohasset enjoys abundance of water

While most towns on the South Shore face mandatory water bans and other restrictions, Cohasset is unique among its neighbors for its abundance of available water. The Phase II Water Restrictions in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset do NOT affect the Cohasset Water Customers in the rest of the town.

Specifically, only Cohasset homes and businesses serviced by Aquarion and not customers of the Cohasset Water Department are subject to the recently announced restrictions of water use, such as the prohibition of sprinklers and limit of hand-watering to odd/even days. Cohasset Water Department customers currently face no bans or use restrictions.

"Thirty years ago the people of Cohasset took the initiative to invest in ensuring that the Town always has adequate water supply," explains Glenn Pratt, Chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission. "Right now with demand at its highest for the year, we are delivering less than one percent of our total storage capacity on any given day."

"Thirty years ago the people of Cohasset took the initiative to invest in ensuring that the Town always has adequate water supply.
— Glenn Pratt, Cohasset Water Commission.

Recently the Cohasset Water Department finished the reactivation of the Ellms Meadow Well, adding further capacity to the system. The rehabilitation of the Ellms Meadow Well provides water from an underground source, separate from Lily Pond or the Aaron River. "The new well has been up and running for over a month, and adding an extra 80,000 gallons per day of spring water to our system," Pratt explained.

The Department is also pleased with the progress of measures taken to reduce the presence of "discolored water." This issue commonly results from the scouring affect caused by more water flowing through the system during high-demand periods. The Cohasset Water Department continues to pursue a number of measures in the effort to reduce occurrences of discolored water, as well as to improve water quality overall.

For questions or other information about the Cohasset Water System please visit www.cohasset-water.org or call (781) 383-0057.

N. Cohasset on water restriction

Aquarion Water Co. of Massachusetts officials announced recently that they activated Phase II of the company's Mandatory Water Restrictions Program for customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset Wednesday, Aug. 1. The move is due to the continued high water demands the company is experiencing caused by the periods of hot and dry weather.

Under Phase II outdoor watering is allowed on an odd/even basis between 6 and 9 p.m. using hand-held watering devices only. The Phase II restrictions do not allow permanent irrigation systems or unattended sprinklers to be used. Under the odd/even water schedule, odd numbered street addresses may water on odd numbered days and even numbered addresses may water on even numbered days using hand-held hoses only between 6 and 9 p.m. Hand-held hoses allow water to be directed to the specific area of need.

Under Aquarion's Rules and Regulations approved by the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities, failure to comply with the mandatory restrictions will first result in a written warning. Subsequent violations can result in the discontinuance of water service with termination and restoration fees ranging from a minimum of $50 to $325, depending on the day of the week, time of day and holidays.

Under the MA DEP Water Management Act, Aquarion is only allowed to pump an average of 3.51 million gallons per day on an annual basis. "During the summer, we have found that water usage increases about 150 percent or more, and most of that increase is due to outside watering through the use of irrigation systems."

Aquarion recommends several ways to use water wisely outdoors and inside the home to help in the water conservation effort:

- Water your lawn and garden only when they need it.
- Don't follow a set watering schedule. Water grass and plants by hand only when they show signs of wilting. An easy way to tell if your lawn requires water is to step on the grass and then step back. If the grass stays flat, then it needs to be watered. If the grass springs up, it still has plenty of moisture.
- Deep soak your lawn and garden when you do water.
- Water by hand long enough for the moisture to soak down to the roots where it will do the most good. In this way, the lawn will develop a deeper root system that requires less watering and is more disease resistant.
- Water during the cooler parts of the day to avoid evaporation.
- Heat and wind will rob your lawn and garden of water before it can be used. Watering before 9 a.m. and after 6 p.m. helps to prevent evaporation.
- Repair all leaks indoors and outside. A dripping faucet that leaks one drop per second wastes about 2,700 gallons per year.

Indoor conservation tips:

- Avoid running the dishwasher and washing machine with partial loads. Turn off the water while shaving, brushing teeth and washing face or hands.
- Fill water jugs and refrigerate to avoid running the water to get it cold.

Schools end year in the black

The School Department closed out its fiscal 2007 budget in the black and was able get ahead in fiscal 2008. The School Committee voted to prepay $118,646.54 towards next year's budget for special education tuition.

The surplus was largely due to savings in the heat utility accounts because of the mild winter, said school business manager Dave DeGennaro in an email. The installation of heating computer controls that allow the schools to better manage the times, days and temperature settings led to savings as well.

Special education tuition is "monies paid to out of district private schools that specialize in the specific needs of an individual that a public school is unable to provide in a public school setting," said DeGennaro. In fiscal 2007 almost $1.1 million was paid for special education tuition. At the close of fiscal 2006, $89,966.94 was pre-paid to special education tuition.

Pre-paying special education is a common practice for school districts throughout the state

"I would say most school districts in the state do so, or have in the past, pre-paid special ed tuition with any remaining funds. Due to the nature of unforeseen expenses with special education, it makes good business sense to do so, if possible," said DeGennaro.

Rain gardens are growing

The Water Commission is completing phase two of their rain garden project. Four rain gardens will be installed at the intersection of Route 3A and Pond St., a critical location in the Water Commission's eyes because it is where Peppermint Brook runs under 3A toward Lily Pond. A fifth rain garden will be installed at the end of Aaron River Road.

Rain gardens are a state Department of Environmental Protection approved stormwater "best management practice." The low-impact development strategy is designed to create a natural filtration process to treat stormwater runoff. The rain gardens are constructed on town land in neighborhoods abutting tributaries that feed Lily Pond.

Ten rain gardens were installed earlier in the summer as part of phase two. Phase one installed six rain gardens last year, including one at the Water Department building on King St. and at the Middle-High School. The Water Commission is accelerating the timeline to install 25 more rain gardens, said Water Commissioner John McNabb. About 20 rain gardens will be installed along Route 3A pending Mass Highway approval. McNabb expects the rain garden project, a total of 45 gardens, to be completed before next spring.

Norfolk Ram Group, the Water Commission's engineering consultant, conducted studies before the rain gardens were installed and will do similar studies after installation.

"We should have quantitative results by this time next year, if not before," said Water Commissioner John McNabb.

How does Cohasset measure up?

MUNICIPAL BENCHMARKING: COHASSET-AT-A-GLANCE

	Annual Growth
COHASSET	0.0%
Benchmark Peer Group	0.3%

Source: Municipal Benchmarking (www.municipalbenchmarking.com).

This chart shows Cohasset's estimated population by year from 2000 through 2004. The chart also shows the same information for the average of Cohasset's Benchmark Peer Group. By comparing Cohasset with its peer group, one can get a sense for whether Cohasset has been undergoing any population shifts that differ from its peer communities.

Municipal Benchmarking determined Cohasset's Benchmark Peer Group by analyzing 15 demographic traits to find the 20 most similar communities in Massachusetts. Cohasset's peer group includes Boxborough, Carlisle, Dover, Duxbury, Hamilton, Lincoln, Lynnfield, Manchester-By-The-Sea, Marblehead, Medfield, Norwell, Sherborn, Southborough, Swampscott, Topsfield, Wayland, Wenham, West Newbury, Westwood and Winchester. Municipal Benchmarking uses information collected from municipal and school district filings, state and federal agencies, associations, surveys, and information requests under the Massachusetts Public Records Law.

Municipal Benchmarking (www.municipalbenchmarking.com) provides municipal officials, education administrators, citizens, labor leaders, realtors and other interested parties with unbiased data and analysis to help make more informed decisions.

Judging a community by its peer group

The Cohasset Mariner is publishing a new feature: Cohasset At-A-Glance. Cohasset At-a-Glance is a series of charts, which compare Cohasset to its Benchmark Peer Group, the 20 most similar communities in Massachusetts. Each week the chart will look at a different area of interest in Cohasset's municipal government, such as taxes, police spending, fire staffing, municipal salaries, education spending, debt and land use.

The At-a-Glance charts were prepared by Municipal Benchmarking, LLC, a Waltham-based company that provides data and analysis to help municipal decision-makers, education officials, taxpayers, union members, such as teachers, and others make more informed decisions.

Community Newspaper Company, publisher of the Cohasset Mariner, entered into an agreement with Municipal Benchmarking this year to present this data to readers in a series on weekly charts.

Cohasset paid Municipal Benchmarking LLC roughly $7,500 for the full report which is available at Town Hall.

Water Commission will likely appeal solved the project could break ground, Dale has said previously.

But, appeal of the ground discharge permit is likely according to Water Commissioner John McNabb.

"I feel we are an aggrieved property owner," said McNabb explaining the Avalon on-site wastewater treatment facility and groundwater discharge will add a significant amount of nutrient to Lily Pond and the surrounding areas, "excess nutrients in the water is our main problem."

Lily Pond, which is the prime source of the town's drinking water, is located approximately one-mile from the proposed Avalon site. In addition to nutrient-loading concerns, the Water Commission would have liked to see more strict measures enforced for the total nitrogen allowed in the effluent. In the DEP's response to comments from the Water Commission and possibly others, they address the public comments, and then explain their reasoning for the ultimate decision.

The final permit sanctions the discharge of treated sanitary sewage from the on-site wastewater treatment facility to the ground.

This is not the first time the Water Commission has fought the Avalon development on the grounds it will contribute to groundwater pollutants and adversely impact water quality in Lily Pond. In January, after an 18-month lawsuit, the Water Commission was defeated in its appeal of the comprehensive permit. The Appeals Court affirmed the decision of the Land Court that the Commission did not have standing to challenge the comprehensive permit as collectively they were not a person aggrieved by the Zoning Board of Appeals decision. The decision meant that the Water Commission could not initiate a lawsuit against the project in that respect.

The Water Commission met on Thursday (Aug. 2) evening after the Mariner went to press to hear from their environmental engineer consultants from the Norfolk Ram Group and their attorneys and determine if they will appeal.

As an enterprise fund, the Water Department is self-sustaining through user fees and does not use money from the town's general fund, including legal expenses.

Alternative Energy Committee hires consultants

The Alternative Energy Committee has recently engaged Joanne Sanders and Judeth VanHamm, both of Hull, as energy consultants. Funds were allocated at the fall 2006 Special Town Meeting for the AEC to hire a consultant(s) VanHamm and Sanders both bring experience in grant writing, having successfully secured funding for several energy conservation and renewable energy projects in Hingham and Hull.

The AEC is looking forward to working with them on a number of items. The committee has devoted much of the past two years investigating the possibility of bringing wind power to Cohasset. The investigation culminated in the installation of a 50-meter MET Tower on Turkey Hill in May of this year. The MET Tower will take wind measurements for the next 12 months. Once this study is complete, the AEC hopes to move forward with wind projects for two or more sites in town.

Currently, the AEC is working with the Planning Board and town counsel to draft a Wind Energy Overlay District. The AEC will also be involved with energy audits of town buildings, possible systems upgrades for town facilities and conservation measures and grant writing for funding of renewable energy systems.

The AEC consultants first task will be to develop a Request for Proposal for a 10 kwh solar system for the Paul Pratt Library.

Ames leads wetland plant identification workshop

CSCR UPDATE

AISLING GUINEE

Fifteen students gathered at the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research for a one-day workshop concerning wetland plant identification on Monday, July 23. With Mr. David Ames heading the training session, students and teachers from Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate, Derby Academy and Whitman-Hanson Regional High School embarked on a learning session to discover the techniques involved in gathering, examining and identifying wetland plants.

Mr. Ames, a science teacher from Cohasset High School, is in his third year volunteering at CSCR. He is the group leader for the wetland-monitoring project, which collects data about: vegetation, soil-water salinity, fish/crabs/shrimp, birds and invertebrates living in and around a marsh. His expertise in this area proved valuable for the session held on Monday that was used to help further inform the members of various groups that monitor like-areas in Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield.

We were shown that, although different species of grass may look similar, they are in fact very different...

Mr. Ames began the day by introducing a few species of vegetation that grow in the marsh right outside of the center. We were shown that, although different species of grass may look similar, they are in fact very different and serve specific purposes throughout the wetland. He then taught the team a poem to remember the difference between the different "grass-like" plants.

Sedges have edges
And rushes are round
Grasses are hollow
And commonly found

The other teachers involved in the seminar, Mrs. Derry Schwantner, Mr. Jeff Kotter, Ms. Amy Trask and Mrs. MacHarran, were all anxious to learn what Mr. Ames had to teach so they could implement the new findings in their own wetland research teams. The students were also excited to be learning more about the plants that they had been working with. As quoted by one of the team leaders, Derry Schwantner, those participating in the session were "vegging out and learning a lot about plants!"

The kickoff date is from 10:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Wednesday, Aug. 15.

Few girls achieve Girl Scout's highest honor, the Gold Leadership Award. Virginia Spofford has been working with the Cohasset Historical Society on her Girl Scout Gold Award Project, which is the development of a walking tour of Cohasset Village. Her one-hour tour is actually a historical scavenger hunt, during which participants follow a defined route in an attempt to solve a puzzle.

The kickoff date is from 10:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Wednesday, Aug. 15. Participants can pick up a map during those hours at the South Shore Community Center and follow the route to solve the puzzle. The quest ends at the Society's headquarters at 106 South Main St., where refreshments will be served.

The Cohasset Historical Society congratulates Virginia and they hope people will support her by joining them Aug. 15 to enjoy her achievement, which will benefit Cohasset for years to come.

Turning plastic bags into stylish totes

Not one to give up so easily, Ulmer consulted her professor, Peggy Diggs, to see if she had any ideas for other methods or materials Ulmer could use to knit and crochet. It didn't take long for them to decide on one of the most plentiful (and cheap) materials out there — plastic bags.

"It's a free material, which made it exactly what I was looking for," says Ulmer, but the environmental undertones of the project were not lost on her, "I thought 'this is a brilliant way to recycle.'"

After college, Ulmer tried out the 9-to-5 working schedule but realized quickly it wasn't for her. This summer, she returned to her hometown and decided to start her own business, Be a Bag Lady. She has been selling the bags on the internet at www.beabaglady.com and at the Farmer's Market on the Common.

Even more than the re-useable bags now available at supermarket, Ulmer's bags actually use the product that's polluting. Literally billions of bags are produced and handed out free in consumer venues across the world each year. Each of Ulmer's creations utilizes 100-plus plastic bags.

"It doesn't make a huge difference but it is 100 or more bags not out in the environment," she says

Finding just the right method to create the bags was a trial and error process, but over time Ulmer figured out the most seamless method for creating the plastic bag "yarn" and then the tote bag itself. The time-consuming and laborious process, which can total about six hours per bag, begins with the creation of a skein of yarn. Ulmer lays out the plastic bag flat and cuts off the handles and bottom. She then cuts the bags into width-wise in about one-inch tubes, the tubes should be complete circles. Next, Ulmer intertwines two tubes together to create a seamless piece of plastic.

"I don't use all of the bag, but it's minimal," she says.

After Ulmer creates the skeins of yarn, she sets out to create the bag. Each one is one-of-a-kind, "every bag is an artistic venture. I use whatever I have on hand so I don't know what the bag's going to look like when I start out."

Her customers so far have used the bags for a variety of purposes, from a shopping tote to a beach bag to carryall for the gym.

"People come up with all different ways to use them," she says. Although the bags are not waterproof, they are easy to clean and "surprisingly durable," she says. The end product has the appearance of a woven wicker or straw and is soft to the touch. The plastic bag yarn unexpectedly takes on the quality of yarn, with tiny contrasting flecks dotting the surface of the bag due to the writing on each of the plastic bags. She uses plastic bags with a little more weight to them to construct the bottom of the bag.

Amy Ulmer "knits" a tote bag using "yarn" she has created from plastic shopping bags. She has a stand at the Farmer's Market on the Common, Thursdays 2:30-6:30p.m.

Ulmer's friends and family have helped her along the way by donating their plastic bags and offering to make the plastic skeins of yarn. All the bags she uses are previously used and are being recycled.

The bags are only part of Ulmer's greater ambition to be a California entrepreneur, along with her sister, Kimberly, a 2007 William graduate. They plan to start an artsy, cultural boutique in Ventura County. Her vision is to make the bags even more socially conscious by working local women's shelters and victims of domestic abuse to teach them how to knit and make the bags. By teaching them the process (and paying them for their service) she hopes to empower them. Each bag would then be sold with a short biography of the woman who created it, she says, in an effort to raise awareness of women's issues.

Ulmer has no plans for patent her bag-making process and she does not believe she's the first person to dream it up. She encourages the people she meets to make the bags themselves — "if they are feeling empowered to do so." She even has detailed instructions of the process on her website.

"I find [the project] worthwhile to do regardless of profit," she says.

Her ideal hope is the manufacturing of plastic bags is ceased. San Francisco has already banned plastic bags from large supermarkets, and she hopes other cities and towns will follow suit.

Ulmer's bags are available online at www.beabaglady.com in three sizes: large tote, medium tote and book bag, all under $50. Custom bags are available. She has a stand at the Farmer's Market on the Common, Thursdays 2:30-6:30p.m.

Ticks be gone

percent cotton leg wrappers — think a more sedate version of the 80s' leg warmer fashion statement — are worn over pants.

After coming up with the initial concept idea, she researched the life cycle of ticks to ascertain whether her idea would be useful against them. She found most of a tick's two-year life span is spent on the ground, waiting for a host, either human or an animal. Tick season runs from late spring into the fall. Only in the fall, around October, do ticks climb up grasses and vegetation to wait for a larger host mammal or human to latch on to, Cook says.

Therefore, she reasoned the leg wrappers, which cover the leg below the knee and over footwear, would be very effective in repelling ticks for the spring, summer and early fall when people are enjoying the great outdoors the most.

The Kick-a-Ticks fit snugly over pants with Velcro elasticized bands on the top and bottom of the leg wrapper, "you don't even know you have them on, there's no compression" on your leg from the elastic band, Cook says.

The Kick-a-Ticks are then enhanced with Permethrin. The initial application lasts up to six weeks and through several washings. A refill bottle of permethrin is also available at the Kick-a-Tick website.

"People who are gardening can just strap them on and don't have to think about it," says Cook, "the sad thing is you can get tick bites almost anywhere." She envisions boy and girl scouts, avid gardeners, landscapers, hikers and kids going to camp would be ideal customers.

Cook doesn't guarantee Kick-a-Tick will prevent a tick bite or Lyme disease, but the product does give a level of protection beyond just wearing long pants, "it's about doing the best you can with what's available."

Kick-a-tick currently has a patent-pending and, although Cook has no idea where her product will take her, she'd "love it to be a success."

"When I was a kid you didn't have to worry about mosquitoes or about ticks, now you really have to worry about them," says Cook.

The leg wrappers come in two sizes, adult, colors - navy or green, and children's, in the ever popular camouflage. The price of the adult leg wrappers is $39.99, and the child's leg wrappers are $37.99. To purchase a pair, visit the on-line store at www.kickatick.com. Lyme disease in Cohasset

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said more cases of Lyme disease have been reported this year than in the past. In fact, he has noticed in the last few years an increase of occurrences throughout town. Part of the reason, he guesses, is increased development has displaced deer, which deer ticks (the ones that carry Lyme disease) commonly use as their host.

Lyme disease can be treated anytime after infection with an antibiotic, but if treated immediately the effects are minimized, said Godzik. The long-term effects of Lyme disease can lead to neurological, joint or cardiac problems. Tick to human transmission of Lyme disease is the only method of infections known, said Godzik. Lyme disease was named for the town where it was first diagnosed, Lyme, Connecticut.

Wearing long sleeve shirts and pants and doing frequent tick checks after being outside are the first line of defense against infection. Donning light colored clothing helps to spot the black colored ticks easily.

History and wildlife of the Hull shore

From roller coasters to steamboats to the region's most famous amusement park and beyond, Hull has a historical story to tell. And, situated as it is between the Weir River and the Atlantic Ocean, it has a wonderful natural story to tell as well.

Join Mass Audubon educator and Hull historian John Galluzzo from 9 to 11 a.m., on Sunday, Aug. 5, for a van trip along the coastline to find the history and wildlife of the Hull shore. The trip will include visits to historic and natural sites from the Weir River to Pemberton Point.

Attendees are reminded to dress appropriately for the weather and to bring binoculars.

"Birdlife and History Along the Hull Coast" will depart from Mass Audubon's North River Wildlife. The fee for this program is $12 for Mass Audubon members and $15 for non-members. Pre-registration is required. Attendees are reminded to dress appropriately for the weather and to bring binoculars.

For directions to the North River Wildlife Sanctuary or for an alternate meeting place, call Galluzzo at 781-837-9400.

Summer ball teams up to big things

Cohasset's 8- and 11-year olds excelling in tournament play

Cohasset's 8-year old summer baseball team walked off the field as champions Monday night after capturing the 2007 Pembroke Invitational title against a formidable Kingston team under the bright lights and light mist at the Town Field Complex in Pembroke.

Coaches Dan Rice and Rich Burchill, along with assistants Matt Broderick and Doug Eymer, watched their boys progress with each performance to make their way to the championship game. Six games over a span of three days, and there were many hours at the field of dreams with lots of fans to cheer the team on.

After dropping the first game in a close match against East Bridgewater, 2-1, the team rallied and never looked back. Spectacular pitching by the Four Horsemen - Ben Rice, Michael Cohen, Timmy Chase and Owen Gideon-Murphy - helped this gritty bunch stay competitive in every game and let their offense wear down their opponents.

After stringing three wins in a row against Halifax (9-5), Whitman (4-3), and Kingston (10-0, needing to win by nine to make the semifinals), the boys in blue advanced to the semifinal round against a talented Halifax team.

The kids were ready for prime-time in the semifinal match-up; eight out of 12 players registered a hit and four different players scored. Liam "Old School" O'Connell was a sparkplug at the leadoff spot to ignite his team with solid at-bats, including a hit and run scored. Gideon-Murphy went 3-for-3 and scored three times, while Joe Cavanaro went 2-for-3, drove in the tying run and scored the winning run to earn a Game Pin.

Chase had a clutch hit to start the sixth inning rally and crossed home. Taggert Eymer had a lit-

COASTAL LEAGUE CHAMPIONS

COURTESY PHOTO

The Cohasset Soccer Club's girls U18 team recently completed a successful 2007 season with the team finishing as the Girls U18 Coastal League Champions. Following eight weeks of league play, Cohasset ended the regular season in a three-way tie with Norwell and Scituate for the U18 championship. In a weekend playoff, Cohasset first beat Norwell on Saturday, then solidly beat Scituate on Sunday resulting in Cohasset taking the championship trophy.
The Cohasset team included freshman to seniors from Cohasset High School and area private schools as well as a handful of players from Hingham. With only seniors Haley Haracz and Colleen Richardson lost to graduation and a strong group of new freshmen expected to be added to the team, next year's results can be expected to be even better.

Another tough loss for Outlaws

Fourth quarter mishaps drop South Shore's record to 0-2

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Would have, could have, should have.

That is the mantra surrounding the South Shore Outlaws these days, as the Plymouth-based semiprofesional football team took another tough loss in Sunday's New England Football League action, dropping a 22-16 decision to the Woonsocket (R.I.) Sentinels.

The Outlaws are 0-2 going into Saturday night's 7 p.m. home game at Plymouth South High School against the Southern New England Rage.

Taking Sunday's loss and the season-opening 10-7 defeat to the Whaling City Clippers into account, the Outlaws could just as easily be 2-0. The six-point loss to the Sentinels was particularly excruciating, as the Outlaws took a 16-7 lead into the fourth quarter only to lose the game on two foolish mishaps. The first came on a lost fumble that the Sentinels picked up and ran back from a touchdown, with the ensuing extra point cutting South Shore's lead to two at 16-14.

Still, the visitors looked as though they were headed to victory when, with 42 seconds left in the game, a desperate fourth down pass by Woonsocket went well out of the range of the intended receiver and landed out of bounds. But an Outlaws defender got called for a 15-yard penalty for hitting the receiver from behind and while out of bounds, giving Woonsocket a fresh set of downs deep inside South Shore territory.

The Sentinels went in for the score in the closing seconds, got the two-point conversion, and that was the ballgame.

On't have feel, but what can

All-Scholastic girls lacrosse team

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and we do feel secure that we chose the top public school girls lacrosse athletes for this honor.

Next week: boys lacrosse

Linday Durkin – Senior
Attack – Cohasset

An excellent pure goal-scorer, the South Shore League All-Star had another high-scoring season for the Skippers, racking up 52 goals this spring…Durkin, a two-time All-Scholastic graduates from Cohasset High School with over 200 career points, achieving that feat with a three-goal performance against Notre Dame…Scored a season-high seven goals in two Cohasset games against Cape Cod Academy, both Skipper wins…Had another five goals in late-season game against Scituate

Kara Oloskey –
Senior (Captain)
Center – Duxbury

Few could keep up with this speedy attackwoman…A go-to girl on the Duxbury squad, Oloskey shined in several games this season but perhaps the brightest in the Div. 2 state championship…There, the senior racked up seven goals and one assist to give the Dragons their first title in a 16-13 win over Winchester…Led her Duxbury team and the Patriot League in scoring this season with 125 points on 80 goals, 45 assists this spring…Career numbers find Oloskey with 283 points on 188 goals, 95 assists…Multiple goal games were a trend for Oloskey, who netted four goals, three assists in a win over Scituate and three goals, two assists in the 12-10 win over Hopkinton that earned the Dragons (19-3) the Div. 2 South title…The PL and Eastern Mass. All-star also played soccer at DHS…She will attend UMass-Amherst next year on a lacrosse scholarship.

Trish Babson – Junior
Attack – Duxbury

What a playmaker…Babson was about as good as it gets when it came to rolling the crease…A strong player with deceptive speed, Babson was the team leader in assists this spring with 79…She added 49 goals, racking up 128 points for the Patriot League and Div. 2 state champions…The PL and Eastern Mass. All-star was essential in the Dragons' second-half comeback in the title game against Winchester, racking up three-straight goals to erase a once 11-9 deficit with a 16-3 victory for the squad's first championship…Scored four goals and two assists in the title game…Against rival Norwell in the Div. 2 South semis, Babson tallied two goals, two assists in the 8-6 victory…Scored a goal and seven assists in a win over Scituate…Added six assists in a win over Bourne…Babson also plays soccer at DHS and serves as the varsity wrestling team's manager in the winter…She will return to all three squads as a senior next year.

Erin Levesque – Junior
Midfield – Duxbury

Came up big throughout the season for Duxbury (19-1), utilizing her lacrosse smarts and great speed to plow through opposing defenses and set up plays…The junior often took defenses by surprise producing scores with long runs out of the middle…Her efforts paid off in the form of 49 points this season on 38 goals, 11 assists for the Div. 2 state champions…Shined brightest in the postseason where she scored three goals and added an assist in an 8-6 victory over rival Norwell in the Div. 2 South semis…There, Levesque erased a 5-4 deficit with game-tying and go-ahead scores…In the Div. 2 South finals against Hopkinton, Levesque again stepped up to the plate, tallying four scores to help the Dragons win the title…Notched two goals and an assist in the 16-13 victory over Winchester in the Div. 2 state title game…Also a field hockey and hockey player at DHS, Levesque will return to all three teams next year.

Kate Cipoletti –
Senior (Captain)
Defense – Duxbury

This standout defenseswoman was the anchor of a defense that had a knack for putting the clamps on opposing offenses, particularly in the second half…Cipoletti was a strong presence in front of the Duxbury (19-3) net and often had the difficult task of marking the opposing team's best player…Did so with vigor in the Dragons' Div. 2 state title game against Winchester, quieting it's deadly attack and limiting it to just one goal in the game's final 12 minutes…This allowed Duxbury's offense to go to work and rally for a 16-13 victory for the team's first championship. Cipoletti also contributed to the Dragons' offense with long runs out of the back field and was a great distributor of the ball in the midfield…Was a terror in fielding ground balls off face-offs, including a big scoop in the state title game, which led to a game-tying score and started the comeback…The PL and Eastern Mass. All-star hopes to continue her lacrosse career at Boston University next year.

Stephanie Hoomis –
Sophomore
Goalie – Duxbury

Without this talented goalie between the pipes, things could have turned out differently this season for the Div. 2 state champion Dragons. To put it bluntly, Hoomis was a brick wall in the net for Duxbury, particularly in the postseason, where her skills were needed most…The sophomore shook off three quick goals and stopped 18 shots, including a huge point blank one with two minutes to play, in a nail-biting 16-13 win over Winchester in the Div. 2 state title game…But big saves were something of a trend for Hoomis, who stopped another key shot off a Norwell stick with three minutes to play in an 8-6 win in the Div. 2 South

Cohasset's 8- and 11-year olds excelling in tournament play

tle bingo when needed most. Michael Tesauro worked the count and played steady "D" in the clutch. Luke Norton played some tight outfield to prevent any long term damage from Halifax's potent offense.

But it was one very big at-bat that made the difference and earned this little big-man a shiny, spanking new Game Ball. Owen "Big Stick" Burchill faced off against Halifax's best to run the count full with two outs and two on, game tied. He ripped a deep shot to left center to drive in the winning run and put a smile on the faces of his teammates that still hasn't worn off. On to the championship…

The championship game was a rematch against a Kingston team that likely rested their big guns against Cohasset in its earlier contest, knowing that they would meet up again.

"Old School" was magnificent at lead-off going 3-for-4 along with a stellar night at second to deny Kingston of any good fortune. Rice pitched great in relief and took one for the team off the back and caught like a champ behind the plate. Chase started on the hill, went 3-for-3, scored twice and earned another Game Ball (Minot Construction's next project will be an addition to the Chase home for this boy's trophies). Gideon-Murphy hit the cover off the ball and pitched some nasty relief to keep his boys in the game.

Cavanaro played great "D" at third and logged another clutch hit late and scored the go-ahead run in the sixth. Eymer scored the eventual game winning run in the sixth, while Teasuro logged a key base on balls and played well in the field. Luke Norton held fort in left and worked the pitch count at the plate. Will Broderick earned a Game Pin for his outstanding defense in left with a nice catch and throw to make a key out late in the contest, and Kyle O'Brien registered what turned out to be the hit of the night to bring home the clinching run.

But no matter at what level, it all still seems to come down to pitching, and Michael Cohen was there when his team needed him most. Cohen had one inning left in him to battle Kingston's best for the crown, and went right to the wire. Bases loaded, two outs, two strikes, and one very nice pitch for the final out: game over… bring out the Trophies! Great Tournament, Great Coaching and a shiny gold statue to remember it by…Congratulations boys!

Summer playoffs

You could count the total number of hits on one hand…no one up more than twice…game over in less than 90 minutes…one-run shutout…that's right, we're talking 8-year old summer playoff baseball.

Rice took the hill for the start and walked away from a couple of jams unscathed. Cavanaro came in for relief and pulled out the sharpie to add a few K's inside the brim of his cap, and Chase mowed down the rest with his stuff to close it out for the victory. The crazy eights faced a stout team from Stoughton who brought their own cast of well-armed hurlers to the first playoff match-up of the 2007 summer baseball season.

O'Connell introduced us to his little friend, a fully loaded authorized ball-smashing stick to get things going at leadoff. But it was a tough task to bring him home when the lads from Stoughton were throwing peas at Cohasset hitters. It wasn't until the fourth inning that Cohasset put a ding in Stoughton's armor to break the scoreless tie.

Chase ripped a nice hit to left field before Cavanaro slapped a shot to second that never made it to first while Chase strolled home. Luke Norton battled to get on in the fifth with a walk ahead of Charlie Krumsiek's deep lined shot to left center for a nasty double to put runners at second and third. But Stoughton continued to battle and pulled away without giving up another run.

With the home team Cohasset ahead 1-0 in the top of the sixth, Chase played a little "dent the catcher's mitt" with his low heat to cause the Stoughton batters to swing the bat while the ball was being thrown back to the pitcher. Great defense at third by Eymer, terrific catching behind the plate by Burchill, steady outfield play by Charlie Dubiel, Joe Campadelli and Tesauro. And one big win for the boys in blue.

11A bats alive

The 11A summer baseball all-stars rolled through the Weymouth Invitational Tourney with a thunderous display of hitting over the weekend of July 20.

Third baseman Tommy Ryan got the fireworks started with a home run to dead center in the Friday night opener. The bats really heated up the next morning, as the all-stars exploded for 11 runs against a tough Weymouth Maroon squad, in an 11-3 win. In the sixth, Brendan O'Connell and Jack Kuppens went deep, back-to-back, as each blasted home Rruns over the center field fence. O'Connell had three hits, Joe Buckley, Sam Asnault and Jack Stanganelli each contributed two hits apiece, and Danny Tangherlini continued his season long march towards the Youkalis on-base king crown, with two walks.

The defense was stellar - particularly the fleet Tangherlini, who patrolled the outfield from center - backing up the solid pitching of Asnault.

Two hours later, Cohasset took on the Weymouth Gold all-stars. The Gold jumped to a quick 6-0 lead. Ryan took the hill in relief and pitched a sterling game, with help from Max Montgomery's flawless game at short, a diving stab by Asnault at second, and the cannon arm of Buckley in right.

The Cohasset offensive machine responded. Charlie Steele led the way with a 3-for-3 performance, Chris Cohen was 2-for-2 with a double off the center field fence, and Liam Burke 2-for-2 as well. In the bottom of the sixth, trailing by a run, Cohen singled to left, Burke doubled to tie the game, and with one out, O'Connell singled in the winning run as Cohasset rallied for 10-9 win.

On Sunday, the Cohasset squad faced off with the big bats of Hingham, and the offensive fireworks continued. After spotting Hingham two runs in the top of the first, Steele started the fire with a lead off single, O'Connell followed with his second home run of the tourney to center, and the boys in blue were even. Kuppens singled, stole second, and dashed around the bases on a Hingham passed ball, as Cohasset took a 3-2 lead.

In the second, Cohen, Montgomery, Justin Cobin and Steele plated another run, as Cohen singled, Montgomery reached on a fielder's choice, moved up on Cobin's long fly to right, and scored on Steele's double. In the third, Cohasset exploded for five runs, keyed by Ryan's second home run of the tourney.

The onslaught continued into the fourth, as Stanganelli blasted a homer to center, and Kuppens smashed another one for the record books into the outfield of another field; the tape measure came back at 306 feet. After four, the boys in blue walked off with a slaughter rule 13-3 win.

Sunday afternoon, Cohasset faced Braintree National in a showdown for a berth in the final. As the other tourney teams and fans lined the field, a classic commenced. Cohasset was inspired in no small measure by the return of their sparkplug shortstop Terrence Doonan.

A back-and-forth battle saw Cohasset jump to a 2-0 first inning lead on Steele's line single to right, and O'Connell's third home run of the tourney. Braintree rallied for four runs in the bottom of the first on a grand slam by their shortstop.

The teams traded zeros in the second. In the bottom of the third, Braintree plated two more, and with their ace throwing pellets, the 6-2 lead looked safe. But in the fourth, Montgomery doubled and moved to third on Cobin's hard single. Cobin then pickled himself between first and second, allowing the fleet Montgomery to plate Cohasset's third run.

In the fifth, Cohasset rallied for three to tie the game, as the bats took aim at the left field Steel Monster - Burke, O'Connell and Ryan all doubled off the fence, and Steele lined yet another base hit into the outfield. Into the bottom of the fifth, the game stood deadlocked. Braintree rallied for two, keyed by a long double to right.

Cohasset, in its last turn at the plate, scored one, keyed by a pinch hit double by the hot-hitting Cohen, and moved runners to second and third with two outs. Braintree's right fielder then made a play for the ages, snaring a long drive to right with a diving over the head grab. Final score: Braintree 8, Cohasset 7.

The boys in blue had a terrific tourney, each contributing to a total team effort, and cemented their reputation as the "big bats" of the District, as they move toward the District playoffs.

semis…Held 13 of her squads 18 regular season opponents to single digit scores…Just a sophomore, Hoomis still has two more seasons left to play at DHS.

Colleen Mulligan – Junior (Captain) Attack – Hanover

A three-year starter Mulligan has been the go-to girl on offense for Hanover throughout her career…The leading scorer on the Lady Indians' team again this season, Mulligan racked up 64 points on 59 goals, five assists in 12 games this season before being sidelined with an ankle injury sustained late in the spring…Quickness and excellent cutting ability made this Patriot League All-star a lethal weapon up top…Mulligan consistently scored multiple goals in games, tallying eight goals, four assists in a win over Oliver Ames and scored seven goals, two assists in a 14-9 loss to Hingham…Career totals for Mulligan have her with 210 points (160 goals, 50 assists) with one season still left to play…Was voted the MVP of her Hanover team, which went 11-6 and earned a berth in the Div. 2 South tourney…Mulligan also plays field hockey at HHS and will return to both teams next year.

Mary Kate Gorman – Sophomore Center – Hingham

Just a sophomore, this talented attackwoman is already making an impression on the Harborwomen squad…Gorman led the Hingham squad in scoring this spring with 90 points on 66 goals, 24 assists…Career totals find her with 144 points on 96 goals, 48 assists…Gorman's total placed her third amongst Patriot League scorers this season…The sophomore tallied points in every game this season, helping to guide Hingham to a 13-4-1 record and second place finish in the PL (4-2)…Scored seven goals against Bourne, four against Duxbury and Waltham, and had hat tricks in games against Hanover, Notre Dame, and Hopkinton, who edged the Harborwomen out of the Div. 2 South tourney (12-10 in OT)…Netted 15 goals in five games as a member of the lower New England Region squad at the National Tournament over Memorial Day weekend…Just a sophomore, she returns to the HHS team next season.

Emmalee Willis – Senior (Captain) Attack – Hingham

A two-year captain on the Hingham squad, Willis has been one of the most consistent attack women in the Patriot League during her tenure…Great in front of the net, Willis tallied 62 points to rank second on her team and fifth in the PL …Racked up 72 points as a junior and is making her second-straight appearance on the All-Scholastic squad…Played some of her best lacrosse when it mattered most, netting four goals and two assists in Hingham's heartbreaking 12-10 OT decision to Hopkinton in the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South tourney…Strong and fast, Willis' greatest strength was her ability to get to the net and score…For her efforts, she amassed 134 points in two seasons…The HHS graduate plans to continue her lacrosse career at Southern New Hampshire University next year.

Emma Daniels – Sophomore Defense – Hingham

This talented young player always drew the toughest defensive assignment and was extremely effective…As the leader on defense, Daniels was an excellent checker and was an essential part of a defense that kept Hingham in its close games this season…Shined in close games against rival Norwell (6-5 loss), Waltham (13-8 win), and cross-town rival Notre Dame (10-10 tie, 11-8 win)…Did her part to help force overtime in a quarterfinal match-up with Hopkinton in the Div. 2 South tourney, an eventual 12-10 OT loss…Just a sophomore, Daniels was selected to the Lower New England team in the National Tourney in Pennsylvania and helped lead her team to the division finals and championship game…Opposing offenses will have to deal with this tough defender for two more seasons at HHS.

Jill Hallgren – Senior (Captain) Midfielder/Attack – Mansfield

LaSalle University in Pennsylvania will be getting an accomplished player in Hallgren who led Mansfield in scoring with 44 goals and 16 assists …In her final year at Mansfield, her offense helped the Hornets achieve a 14-6-1 record and a trip to the playoffs where her career eventually ended with a 16-6 loss to Norwell…Hallgren was named team MVP and was awarded a spot of the Hockomock League All-Star team…She was recently named an Academic All-American by the U.S. Lacrosse Association.

Kiley Sutton – Junior Center/Forward – Oliver Ames

Sutton followed the family trend of becoming a force on the lacrosse field, following in the footsteps of her older brothers who also starred for OA…The junior led the young Tigers in scoring netting 59 goals and 14 assists this spring…She quickly established herself as the team's go-to player with a knack for goals in clutch situations… Sutton was named a Hockomock League All-Star and will serve as captain for both the soccer and field hockey squads next season.

Jill Cammett – Junior Midfield – Norwell

As good a two-way player as there is in the area, Cammett helped to lead a young Norwell team to the Div. 2 South semifinals before losing to eventual state champion Duxbury…Scored four goals in first round win over Mansfield and followed that with a hat trick in second round victory against Medfield…Had five goals in a regular season matchup with Duxbury…Add it all up and Cammett finished the season with more than 100 points and a spot in the Eastern Mass. All-Star game with teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Katie O'Hara, as well as a nod to the South Shore League All-Star squad…Also plays soccer – where she is a two-time All-Scholastic – and runs indoor track for NHS…Plans to play Div. 1 lacrosse in college.

Jenn Cronin – Junior Midfield – Norwell

Emerged as a solid two-way player to help form a midfield that was arguably the strength of the Norwell team…Ranked second on the squad with 42 goals and 14 assists to go with her already considerable skills on defense…Notched two goals in the Clippers' Div. 2 South semifinal loss to eventual state champion Duxbury…Finished with three goals and two assists in Norwell's first round playoff win in Mansfield…A South Shore League All-Star in her first two seasons of high school lacrosse…Cronin also plays soccer and basketball for NHS.

Katie O'Hara – Senior Goalie – Norwell

Came up big in her first and only season as a varsity starter, and saved her best for the post-season to help lead the Clippers to the Div. 2 South semifinals…Stopped six shots in first round win over Mansfield and eight in a narrow second round win against Medfield, including two remarkable saves in the closing minutes to preserve the win…O'Hara made nine saves, many on pointblank or restart attempts, in playoff loss to eventual state champion Duxbury…Joined teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Jill Cammett in the Eastern Mass. All-Star game, contributing to the South team's victory…O'Hara was also a two-year starting goalie for the NHS field hockey team.

Kerrin Kasianowicz – Junior Attack – Scituate

Always a threat to score when near the cage, Kasianowicz led the Sailors in goals (53) for the second straight season, adding 12 assists in the process…After getting off to a rough start, Scituate went 6-5-1 down the stretch thanks in part to Kasianowicz's prowess on offense…Scored eight goals in April 30 win over Marian, and followed that up with four the next day in a narrow loss to local power Hingham…Had another seven goals in win over Pembroke; games of five or more goals were not rare for the talented junior attack this spring…Two-time All-Scholastic also runs cross-country for SHS.

Jackie Moscardelli – Junior Attack – Weymouth

She's slight of stature but one of the giants on the field, and among the most prolific scorers in all of Emass…Moscardelli scored an amazing 79 goals this season, playing in only 17 of her team's 20 games…She also added 17 assists in helping the Wildcats qualify for the state tournament for the first time in program history… Moscardelli was named team MVP and a first team Bay State League All-Star, in one of the most competitive conferences in the state…She is an accomplished athlete serving as a member of the soccer team and starting point guard on the basketball team… Moscardelli will be back next year to really boost her own records and help lift the Wildcats to even higher plateaus.

you say?" Outlaws owner/general manager Ron Rezendes said Monday morning. "We had 58 yards of penalties and that hurt us. We have two 15-yarders and a holding penalty that killed a drive.

"They were stupid penalties that showed a lack of discipline. You just can't take those kinds of penalties."

The Outlaws were in control for most of the game behind a strong running attack. Luis Gonzalzes (Wareham) ran for 84 yards on 21 carries, and scored both of South Shore's touchdowns on the day. Brian Lewis (Plymouth) chipped in with 21 yards as part of the Outlaws' 148 rushing yards on the day, 32 coming on a fake punt run by Plymouth's Brian Rezendes.

Quarterback Matt Letourneau was solid behind center, completing 5-of-9 passes for 66 yards. John Carpenter (Plymouth) kicked a 35-yard field goal to round out the Outlaws' scoring.

Defensively, Rezendes and Joune Frasier (Kingston) recorded seven tackles apiece, while linebacker Hank Anderson (Duxbury) picked up six solo tackles and two sacks. The Outlaws' defense as a whole allowed just 11 rushing yards, and 154 total for the game.

It was all adding up to a solid win for South Shore, until the calamities hit in the final period.

"You're winning until the fourth quarter, and then you have those two mishaps and the game goes down the drain," Ron Rezendes said. "You can't help but play it over and over again in your head, it was so crazy."

Fun at Wompatuck this summer

Wompatuck State Park Department of Conservation and Recreation will hold the following summer programs. All programs are free and open to the public. An adult must accompany children. All programs meet at the Visitor Center on Union Street unless otherwise indicated. Reasonable accommodations available upon request. Daily ongoing programs are held Mondays, Tuesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. For information or to register call 781-749-7160 or visit mass.gov/dcr.

AUGUST EVENTS

Glimpse of Our Past – For all ages. Meet at 1 p.m., Sunday, Aug. 5, to learn about Wompatuck's military history as an Ammunition Depot. Several Veterans who were stationed there will tell of their experiences at Wompatuck State Park in the 1940's. This is truly a once in a lifetime opportunity to learn about America's past.

Tracking – For all ages. Meets 1 p.m., Monday, Aug. 6, for a short hike in Wompatuck State Park to look for animal tracks. Afterwards, make a wax cast one of Wompatuck's animal prints.

Furniture Painting – For 8 and up. Bring an old end table or chair to Wompatuck at 12:30 p.m., Tuesday, Aug. 7, and turn it into a work of art.

Family Bike Ride – For all ages. Join an interpreter at 6:15 p.m., Friday, Aug. 3 and 10, for a bike ride through Wompatuck State Park to learn how to find your way around the park. Be ready to find some nice spots and bring your helmet, water and insect repellent.

Live Animal Visit – For all ages. Blue Hills Trailside Museum will visit Wompatuck at 9:30 a.m., Saturday, Aug. 11, with animals that can be found around the area. Get up close and personal with some of Wompatuck's favorite furry and feathery friends.

Weekly Walk – For all ages. Enjoy a two-and-a-half to three-mile walk at 10 a.m., Saturdays, Aug. 4 and 11, that will explore some little-known trails in Wompatuck. A bit of history will be covered, as well as some plant identification along the way.

Fitness Run – For 12 and up. Join an interpreter at 1 p.m., Sundays, Aug. 5 and 12, for a three-mile jog through Wompatuck's beautiful hiking and biking trails. This is a great way to get in shape outdoors with a group of people. Meets at the Visitor Center.

ONGOING PROGRAMS

Kids and Nature Exploration – Held from 10 to11:30 a.m., Mondays, Aug. 6, 13, and 20, this program is designed for children 7 to12 to explore the natural world of Wompatuck State Park. Each week, the walk will focus on a different theme and topic and will include activities such as ponding, birding, looking for bugs and other fun things. Cancelled in the event of rain.

Kaleidoscope Kids – Held from 10 to 11 a.m., Tuesdays, Aug. 7, 14, and 21, for preschool children 3 to 6 only, and a parent or caregiver. Join the park interpreter for some fun that is just for the little ones. Each week they will explore a fun topic by reading a story, exploring the world around us and completing a fun craft project. Each week there is a different theme. Held rain or shine.

Friday Family Campfire – Join the interpreter for a family fun campfire from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m., Aug. 3 and 17. They will roast marshmallows, tell stories, play games and enjoy a crackling fire. Wear weather-appropriate clothing and bring something to sit on. Program will be cancelled in the event of rain. Meet in campground at site R75.

Friday Night Hike – Take a walk in the woods with the interpreter from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m., Aug. 10. No flashlights allowed. Learn about how animals of the night use their senses to survive in the dark. Program will be cancelled in the event of rain.

Saturday Junior Rangers – Held from 1 to 2 p.m., Aug. 4, 11, and 18, this program is for children 8 to14. You will receive your official junior ranger activity guide, complete a fun activity with the park interpreter and be on your way to earning your junior ranger patch and certificate. Held rain or shine.

Looking for Prince Charming?

Auditions for "Cinderella," the Rodgers & Hammerstein fairy-tale musical, are set for 7 p.m., on Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 6 and 7, at Sanborn Auditorium in Hingham Town Hall. Callbacks will be Tuesday, at 8 p.m. This is the last chance to be a part of Hingham Civic Music Theatre's cast for this show.

Needed as principals are six women and two men, with two featured men, along with a singing and dancing ensemble. Director for the show is Lisa Pratt, and musical director is Mark Bono, with choreography by Jo-Jo Fitchner.

To audition, just come to the auditorium at 210 Central St., prepared to sing 16 bars of a song that shows one's voice range. Those auditioning for speaking roles will be asked to read from a script.

Performance dates are Oct. 13, 19 and 20, at 7:30 p.m., and Oct. 14 and 21, at 2 p.m.

More information is available on the Web site at HCMT.org, by calling Pat Sherman at 781-837-1499, or emailing hcmtstagemomma@comcast.net.

Don't forget HCMT's other August activity, the Saturday, Aug. 18, sing-along of "The American Songbook Sampler." For this evening, also at Sanborn Auditorium at 7:30 p.m., a group of singers and piano, bass and drum accompaniment will lead the audience in singing the great music of the Gershwins, Irving Berlin, Cole Porter, Rodgers & Hart and Rodgers & Hammerstein, and many others. It's an idea that has been part of a popular monthly Los Angeles program for 15 years. The leader of that program, Judy Wolman, is coming to Hingham to try out the magic here. A narrator, Roy Harris of Hingham, will talk about the songwriters, music and what makes them great. Admission is a $15 suggested donation.

Seaside Road Race set for Sept. 1

Hull Academic Support Coalition will host its annual road race on Saturday, Sept. 1. The Nantasket Seaside Road Race is a scenic 4-mile run starting at Hull High School, going along Main Street in Hull Village, along the water overlooking Boston Harbor and Hull Bay, then turning up and over Allerton Hill, back along Allerton Harbor finishing back at Hull High School. This event attracts runners from all over the Boston and South Shore area.

Nantasket Seaside Road Race begins at 8 a.m. at Hull High School, 180 Main St. Participants may register online before Aug. 26 on the Town of Hull Web site, townofhull.ma.us, racersresource.com or coolrunning.com. The entry fee for this race is $15. Day of race registration opens at 6:30 a.m. at Hull High School and the fee is $20. T-shirts are given to all runners and walkers. An award ceremony will follow the race at the finish line at Hull High School.

All proceeds from this race will fund academic enrichment grants for the Hull Public Schools. Hull Academic Support Coalition is a nonprofit organization whose mission is to support and promote academics in the Hull Public Schools. HASC has provided more than $120,000 in grant money to support teacher-initiated academic enrichment projects through the grant program.

Participants may call race director Kristen Evans at 781-925-2720 for more information.

Exotic Animal Show

OBITUARIES

Nancy M. Williams

General manager of MIS Broadridge Financial Solutions

Nancy M. Williams

Nancy M. (McCarron) Williams, 58, of Scituate, died at her home after a brief illness July 30, 2007, surrounded by her family and friends.

Born in Canton, she was the daughter of the late Margaret C. Grogan and Joseph C. McCarron. Mrs. Williams graduated from Scituate High School in 1966, attended Marquette University in Wisconsin and earned a degree in education from Emmanuel College in 1970. She went on to attend Lesley University where she received her master's degree in business management.

At the time of her death, Mrs. Williams was general manager of MIS, Broadridge Financial Solutions in Hingham. Prior to her time at MIS, she worked for New England Life and Putnam Investments. She was also a cantor at St. Mary of the Nativity RCC and St. Frances Xavier Cabrini RCC, both in Scituate.

Mrs. Williams was a woman of varied talents. She enjoyed golf with her many friends at Scituate County Club and was an accomplished musician. She not only sang at St. Mary's, but also played the organ and guitar, filling her home with music. She never missed an opportunity to attend her children's hockey events across North America. Family and friends will especially remember her faithfulness and generosity of spirit.

She leaves her husband of 31 years, Russell E. Williams; her children, Kevin J. Williams and Joanne M. Williams, both of Scituate; her brothers, Joseph C. McCarron Jr. of Virginia, Thomas G. McCarron of Georgia and Steven J. McCarron of Massachusetts; her sisters, Margaret M. Kenny-Muehlberger of Florida, Joanne Charles of England and Beth Overton of Pennsylvania; her stepmother, Margaret O'Brien of Scituate; her stepsisters, Peg O'Brien of Scituate, Ruth O'Brien of Virginia and Kate O'Brien Watkins of Delaware; her stepbrother, Fred O'Brien of Rhode Island; and many cousins, nieces, and nephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at 10 a.m., on Friday, Aug. 3, at St. Mary of the Nativity Church, Scituate Harbor. McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset, handled the arrangements.

In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, P.O. Box 859060, Braintree, MA 02185-9060 or Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, 10 Brookline Place West, Sixth Floor, Brookline, MA 02445.

Frank Wunschel

U.S. Navy WWII Veteran

Frank Wunschel, 80, of Scituate, died June 18, 2007, at the Tippitt Home Hospice in Needham after a short illness.

Born and raised in New Bedford, he was a veteran of World War II. He proudly served in the U.S. Navy for four years on the Destroyer Escorts, the U.S.S Bull and the U.S.S Conklin. A graduate of Boston University, he devoted his years as an English teacher and school administrator within the Cohasset Junior and Senior High School system.

Husband of the late Patricia Wunschel, they enjoyed traveling throughout Europe and the Americas. He was an active supporter of the Scituate Animal Shelter, Scituate Town Library, Etrusco Associates and the Scituate Historical Society. A lifelong Red Sox fan, he watched the game held June 17 with great enthusiasm.

A military service was conducted June 25 at the Bourne National Cemetery in Bourne.

Arrangements were made by Richardson-Gaffey Funeral Home in Scituate.

Judy Ogden to play Cohasset bells

The seventh Summer Series Recital on the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset will be presented Sunday evening, August 5th by Judy Ogden, carillonneur at Burton Tower, University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. She will play a varied program of compositions for carillon by Johan Wagenaar, Matthias Van den Gheyn and Ronald Barnes, transcriptions and arrangements of music by G. F. Handel, George M. Cohan and Jean-Joseph Mouret, and a group of familiar tunes.

The hour-long recital begins at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. It will take place regardless of weather conditions. In case of rain, the bells may be heard from your parked cars. Printed programs, schedules and brochures will be distributed on the Cohasset Common, and will also be available in a stand by the courtyard of St. Stephen's Church on Highland Avenue extension. Listeners are invited to bring chairs, blankets, and picnics to the common or the church courtyard. Following the program, the tower will be open to visitors for a demonstration by the carillonneur and a look at the bells.

Further information may be obtained by calling St. Stephen's Church at 781-383-1083, the Church Carillonneur, Sally Slade Warner at 978-475-2599, or the Assistant Carillonneur, Mary Kennedy at 781-383-9599.

Learn to Row Outing and Peddocks Island Exploration

Come to the Windmill Point Boathouse at Hull Gut to venture offshore in pilot gigs, learn some rowing techniques and explore the wilds of Peddocks Island.

The 11th annual Learn to Row Outing and Peddocks Island Exploration, sponsored by Hull Lifesaving Museum, will take place Friday, Aug. 10, from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., at Windmill Point Boathouse, 185 Main St., Hull. Fee is $15 members, $20 for non-members.

Come to the Windmill Point Boathouse at Hull Gut to venture offshore in pilot gigs, learn some rowing techniques and explore the wilds of Peddocks Island. The staff and coaches of Hull Lifesaving Museum provide the boat training and lunch, and participants bring appropriate footwear, hat, sunscreen, binoculars and personal gear. There will be time to wander the island, swim, paint, and bird or laze in the sunshine. The museum provides a picnic, but attendees are asked to bring their own drinks.

Reservations are a must. For more information, call 781-925-5433 or email lifesavingmuseum@comcast.net.

Musicians from the South Shore Swing Shift and vocalist Katie Ford, bring back the big band era Aug. 3, to the Canoe Club in West Bridgewater.

Swingin' the night away

Swing Shift plays Canoe Club

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESONDENT

"What we're doing is really a throwback to the classic 1940s supper clubs, which were all about great entertainment and a great meal in an elegant setting. We want to capture that feeling again and give people the time of their lives."
QDT founder and producing director George Stevens

The Canoe Club will once again play host to the big band sounds of the 1930s and 40s — and the swing dancing they inspire —when the Quincy Dinner Theater presents "A Midsummer Night's Swing" at the legendary West Bridgewater ballroom on Aug. 3.

"People have been asking me for years to put on a big band dance show," explained QDT Founder and Producing Director George S. Stevens last week by telephone from his Braintree office. "I've got a great 16-piece swing band called 'South Shore Swing Shift,' led by Mark DiRosa of Scituate, and they've mastered all the original arrangements done for Glenn Miller, Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey and Xavier Cugat."

Stevens has a big night planned, which will include a four-course dinner and almost as many entertainment options. Friday evening will open at 6 p.m. with a small jazz combo playing for dancing and listening, with dinner to follow at 7 p.m. After dinner, the big band show will begin. The evening will conclude with a dance contest.

"Television shows like 'Dancing with the Stars' and others are so popular right now that we decided to have a little competition of our very own in which everyone will be welcome to participate either by dancing or just casting their votes. At the end of the evening, we will crown the 2007 Swing Dance Champions of the South Shore."

Big Bands weren't only about saxophones, trumpets, trombones and rhythm sections — they were also famous for the smooth song stylings of people like Frank Sinatra, Peggy Lee, and Doris Day, a fact not lost on Stevens.

"Not only do we have great musicians, but we've also got two sensational singers. Katie Ford, who sang so beautifully in our 2006 Holiday show, will be our female vocalist. We're also delighted to be able to again present Russ Peterson. Russ, who is originally from Taunton, just completed a stint with 'Legends in Concert' in Las Vegas. Local audiences will remember him from the wonderful Engelbert Humperdinck show he did for us a few years back. Russ has a terrific voice and is a wonderful entertainer. He's planning to do some great Sinatra songs. What we're doing is really a throwback to the classic 1940s supper clubs which were all about great entertainment and a great meal in an elegant setting. We want to capture that feeling again and give people the time of their lives."

Danielle Chambers

Cape Playhouse is buzzing with 'Beehive'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Danielle Chambers may be singing up a storm in "Beehive: The 60s Musical," on stage now at the Cape Playhouse in Dennis, but it wasn't that long ago that the performer kept her interest in musical theater quiet.

"For a long time, I was a closet singer. I would never sing when my mother was around," explained Chambers last week during a rehearsal break. "One day, quite by accident, my mother heard me sing and from then on she encouraged me to sing and also study acting."

It wasn't just motherly advice; it was the recommendation of a professional with more than 50 years experience in show business. Chambers' mother is Tony and Emmy Award-winning actress and singer Leslie Uggams, who got her own start at age six when she played Ethel Waters's niece in the television series "Beulah."

Uggams has been in show business ever since, earning acclaim on Broadway and television. While she was pleased to learn that her daughter was interested in following in her footsteps, Uggams made it clear that Chambers would have to make a name all her own for herself.

"I was taught at a very early age not to use my mother's name to try and gain advantage. I learned the importance of having people know me for who I am and not just because of my mother. It is a lesson I have never forgotten. My mother has taught me so much. We've even had the good fortune to work together in 'Into the Woods' at Theatre Under the Stars in Houston, and in 'Cinderella,' last summer at the Ogunquit Playhouse," says Chambers. "There's really competition when we work together. My mother is always very supportive and ready with good, sound advice that helps me improve my performance."

Uggams was in the opening night audience earlier this week when Chambers opened in the Larry Gallagher musical, being directed and choreographed on the Cape by Mark Martino, which celebrates the music of the 1960s through some of its best-known female vocalists including Connie Francis, Aretha Franklin, Tina Turner, and Janis Joplin.

Born on April 11, 1970, to Uggams and husband Grahame Pratt, Chambers was brought up in Beverly Hills and attended the Tisch School for the Arts at New York University. Since 2002, she has been married to actor Keith Chambers. The couple has a personal history with the Cape. "We got engaged at the Isaiah Clark House in Brewster and we even talked about being married at the North Truro Lighthouse, but we ended up eloping. Keith and I both love the Cape very much."

"Beehive: The '60s Musical" will be at the Cape Playhouse, 820 Main St., Route 6A, Dennis, through Aug. 11. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 508-385-3911 or go online at capeplayhouse.com.)

Virginia Spofford holds up a brochure that will be used for self-guided tours of historic Cohasset Village. A kick off event for the village quest will be held Wednesday, Aug. 15 from 10:30a.m. to 1p.m.

Cohasset grad has uncommon quest

Spofford seeking top Girl Scout award

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Did you know the original Cohasset settlers called the Common, "Great Neck Plain"? Did you know the basement of the Paul Pratt Library on Ripley Road was once used as both a bomb shelter and a firing range? Did you know the Meeting House, which now serves as the First Parish, was originally planned for a site near Lily Pond?

Recent Cohasset High 2007 graduate, Virginia Spofford, brings out these interesting facts (and plenty more) in a self-guided historical tour of the Cohasset Village, a project she completed in her pursuit of a Girl Scout Gold Award, the highest honor in girl scouting. The "Historical Cohasset Village Quest" is an interactive walking tour, hence "quest," where participants are challenged to answer questions along the way.

"I've lived here almost my whole life and there was so much I didn't know about the Village. It's amazing how much it has changed even since I was younger," says Virginia. When she first presented the project to representatives of the Girl Scouts of America, she envi-

Good place to eat

Town becoming restaurant magnet

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

There was a moment at Monday night's Board of Selectmen meeting when the packed audience could have been transplanted to a chic restaurant and no one would have thought they looked out of place. A round of applause erupted when the Board of Selectmen voted 4-0 (Vice Chairman Ted Carr was not present) to grant an all-alcoholic liquor license for the future Stella restaurant at 40 South Main St., the former Cohasset Hardware.

In another vote earlier in the evening, Bia Bistro, an established village eatery, was approved for an all-alcoholic liquor license as well. With both votes it seems Cohasset is poised to be a new destination for restaurant dining — a fact Selectmen would like the restaurants to promote. After the vote to grant Bia Bistro's all-alcoholic liquor license, Chairman Gary Vanderwerf suggested the restaurants of Cohasset band together and initiate a campaign to promote "Cohasset as a restaurant town." Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer reiterated the idea after Stella's approval.

Although endorsed by the Board of Selectmen, both licenses still need to be approved by the state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission

Energy boost

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It might be incongruent to say the Alternative Energy Committee is cooking with gas, but that's exactly what they are doing. Wind turbines, photovoltaic solar cells and energy grants are beginning to be looked at as methods to lower the cost of energy for the Town of Cohasset. The AEC has recently hired two energy consultants to assist them in their initiatives.

Judeth Van Hamm and Joanne Sanders, both of Hull, have been hired to guide the town in a transition to alternative energy. Van Hamm and Sanders both bring experience in grant writing, having successfully secured funding for several energy conservation and renewable energy projects in Hingham and Hull.

There was a brief damper at one point during Monday's presentation, but talk of solar panels on the roofs of the library and high school — and saving a substantial amount of money over time — eventually brightened the conversation.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer gave the consultants and AEC members pause when he commented after their initial presentation they should be mindful of

Matthew's Jewelers finds its niche

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Buying jewelry can often be an intimidating experience. A large sum of money is on the line and, if the piece is for someone else even more than money is at stake. A high-pressure salesperson doesn't add much to the experience and can turn the transaction into ordeal. Other times, a jewelry purchase can be an endless search for the perfect piece even though you knew what you wanted from the start.

Matthew Shannon is out to make the jewelry buying experience a little easier. With a specialty in custom jewelry, a personable, knowledgeable manner and a no pressure atmosphere, Matthew's Jewelers is the antithesis of a mall jewelry store.

A relative newcomer on the South Shore jewelry scene, Shannon opened his doors in November 2005. The young entrepreneur was only 22.

When Shannon went off to Bryant University after graduating from Norwell High in 2001, he sought out a part-time job at a local jeweler. Going into it, he had somewhat of an interest in the jewelry business but as he learned more about the industry and the art of jewelry making, it became a

Moderately priced housing encouraged

Affordable housing is a constant concern and issue for the town of Cohasset. The Housing Partnership is working on an affordable housing opportunity at 821 Jerusalem Road and came to the Board of Selectmen a few weeks ago to seek further guidance on a Affordable Housing Plan.

In a vote on Monday night, the Selectmen recommended the Housing Partnership, in addition to encouraging the production of housing to meet the town's 10 percent goal under the state's Chapter 40B law, address the need for single family housing in the $330,000 to $425,000 price range. According to a report prepared by the town's housing consultant, Judy Barrett, this range represents affordability in the town's median household income for a four-person household.

Included in the motion was a request the Housing Partnership work in concert with other boards to conduct a periodic survey of town employees and local senior citizens to determine the housing needs of those groups.

The Selectmen voted 4-0; Vice Chairman Ted Carr was not present.

"How To Get Real (and lasting) Weight Loss and Fitness Results... As Quickly as Possible, With 100% Certainty"
Cohasset, MA - You want to get rid of the fat, lose the weight and have a great body so you look great and feel great. Like most, you've probably tried some things and they haven't worked. WHY? Because you are being lied to. The weight loss industry doesn't care about you – they care about profits. So they tell you what you want to hear. That it's "fast and easy if you just eat our food, take our pill, use our new-fangled gizmo, join our club." BULL! Like everything worthwhile in life, health and fitness results take effort. And cookie-cutter 'secret' solutions don't work. You know that already. (But are you willing to admit it?) If you want real results, as quickly as possible, with 100% certainty, there is only ONE solution that works every time: One-on-One personal training with a certified expert who designs a program specifically for you...and then holds you ACCOUNTABLE to following the program. If you really want what you say you want, then you're ready for the real solution. Police break up underage party; take one in protective custody

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police took an 18-year-old Norwell teen into protective custody last week following a report about an underage party on Atlantic Avenue.

Dispatch received a call from a neighbor at about 9 p.m. on Wednesday (Aug. 1) in the area of Atlantic Avenue and Meadow Lane about a large party with teens. The caller also reported the teens had a bonfire in the yard and that the parents were away.

Upon police arrival, one of the teens took off. Police found about 10 teens ranging in age from 16-18 who had gathered around a small campfire. One of the youths displayed the signs and symptoms of intoxication and was taken into protective custody. The parents of the others youths – who were all from Norwell – were called to pick up their children. There were some open containers of alcohol at the scene and some empty beer cans, police said.

After all the parents had left, there was only one car remaining that police believed belonged to the young man, who lived in the house where the party was being held and who had run into the woods when police pulled up.

Police looked for about half an hour and using an abundance of caution, had the car towed because they did not know whether the teen that ran off had been drinking, Sgt. William Quigley said.

The teen called police two hours later on his cell phone from the yard; he was distraught about his car being towed and was stranded. He said he knew nothing about the party and said it could have been a bunch of his friends who had showed up at his house without permission, police said. Because the teen did not have the alarm code to his house, police surmised that his mother – who was in Hawaii – did not want him there while she was away. Police subsequently talked to the mother who was happy that police had broken up the party, Quigley said.

The teen called police two hours later on his cell phone from the yard; he was distraught about his car being towed and was stranded.

Summonsed

An officer was in a cruiser at the light on the east side of Beechwood Street waiting to turn onto Route 3A when a Volkswagen went through the red light on Tuesday (July 31) at about 8:30 a.m.

The officer effected a motor vehicle stop on Route 3A. Police said the VW had Rhode Island plates and the operator handed the officer a temporary R.I. license that had expired on the operator's birthday.

According to police, the motorist claimed he did not have the chance to go to the R.I. registry for a permanent license. His car was towed and he was issued a summons for driving without a license and going through a red light.

In Massachusetts if a driver's license has expired, the person is considered not to have a license. Police suggest motorists check their licenses on their birthday each year to ensure that it has not expired.

'Stolen' car turns up

A car whose owner thought it had been stolen turned up the next day; it was sticking through the railroad fence across the street, police said.

On Aug. 2 at about 10 p.m. a 29-year-old man reported his 2007 Ford Fusion sedan had just been stolen from his North Main Street driveway.

Officers responded to the scene and the man reported that he had left the car running while he ran inside to take a quick shower. When he came out within 10 minutes, the car was gone. Officers took a stolen vehicle report and put out a BOLO (Be On the Look Out) to area towns.

The next morning at about 8:46 a.m., police received a call from the same area about a blue Ford Fusion that had run into the railroad fence separating the backyards from the tracks. Officers responded and found it was the same car that had been reported as stolen.

Police said while the car was left running, it somehow popped out of gear and rolled out of the driveway, across North Main Street, through someone's yard, through the bushes and into the railroad fence.

Although it is illegal to leave a car running like that, police opted to let the car owner make his peace with his insurance company. The MBTA was notified about the fence.

MedFlight

A 33-year-old Hull man was taken by MedFlight to Brigham and Women's Hospital after falling 13 feet off scaffolding at an apartment building on Spring Street at just before 3:30 p.m. Tuesday (July 31). The man, who had been hired to repair the deck and siding on the building and to install new gutters, complained of head, neck and back pain. He was treated at the scene by Cohasset paramedics but due to the distance of the fall, the fire department had him taken by helicopter to a Boston trauma center. OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration), which has a local office in Braintree, was notified, as is the protocol in industrial accidents. The investigation was turned over to OSHA that will be following up with the injured man to determine what caused the accident. Police said OSHA has investigators specifically trained in how scaffolding should be set up and what safety measures are required.

Threats

A 53-year-old Pembroke man told police he was threatened with physical harm by a 37-year-old Marshfield man, who is employee at a store on Route 3A. The incident started with an argument over whether to use a credit card or debit card, police said. Police provided the alleged victim with information on how to obtain a complaint at Quincy District Court if he wishes to do so. The incident was reported at about 5 p.m. on Tuesday (July 31).

Boat B&E

At about 8:19 p.m. on Tuesday (July 31) a 52-year-old Cohasset man reported his boat, a 2005 Catalina powerboat, which was docked in an area off Parker Avenue, had been broken into. There was no sign of forced entry but a table inside the boat was damaged and someone had stolen most of a case of Heineken beer and two music CDs. Detectives processed the boat and are following up to see if they can come up with any suspects, police said.

Emergency

A caller reported that a young girl wearing a blue and white dress urinated in public last Wednesday (Aug. 1) at about 7 p.m. behind the war memorial on the common. A police officer responded and found the girl, who explained that she had an unavoidable emergency, could not wait, and had tried to get out of sight, police said.

Accidents

• A man's cane that got jammed up in the pedals of his 1997 Mercury Grand Marquis caused a single-car accident last Thursday (Aug. 2) at about 4:10 p.m. at the lights at Beechwood and Route 3A, police said.

Police said an 85-year-old Hingham man traveling with his 83-year-old wife was heading east on Beechwood toward the light when the cane somehow got jammed causing him to veer off the road and travel onto the soft shoulder and into the pole that supports the traffic light.

The car sustained heavy front-end damage. Scituate Rescue transported the man and his wife to South Shore Hospital; their injuries appeared to be minor, police said.

The driver was cited for failure to drive in marked lane. There was some minor damage to the landscaping at Shaw's.

• A 1997 Ford registered out of Rockland had to be towed following an accident in the Town Parking Lot last week. Police said driver inattention was likely the cause of the accident that involved a 2004 Mazda in an angled collision with the Ford (the front left of the Mazda hit the right front of the Ford). No one was cited, police said. The mishap occurred at about 11 a.m. Thursday (Aug. 2).

• A detail officer at Pond Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway helped motorists exchange paperwork following a minor accident at the lights at about 9:25 a.m. Friday (Aug. 3), police said. A 2005 Nissan Maxima rear-ended a 2004 Taurus at the light. The Taurus was stopped on 3A and was headed northbound. Damage was under $1,000 so no police report had to be filed.

• A 2004 car parked at Sunrise and registered to a Scituate woman was damaged in the parking lot at the assisted living facility. The driver's side door was damaged. Police are following up to see if there were any witnesses. The accident was reported at 4 p.m., Saturday (Aug. 4).

Vandalism

A couple of mailboxes were knocked over and lawn ornaments stolen Saturday night into Sunday morning (Aug. 5) in the Old Pasture Road, Reservoir Road and upper Pleasant Street area, police said. The lawn ornaments were recovered and returned to the owners. Police said they have a witness and have identified a suspect who may be responsible. The incidents are under investigation.

Bond anticipation

$15 million in upcoming projects

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In the next couple of years, the town will be bonding about $15 million to fund various projects around town. The projects have already been approved by a Town Meeting vote and will be put into action within the next two years. The bond anticipations notes are short-term loans where the town only pays interest on the amount borrowed; none of the principal is paid off.

The Board of Selectmen voted and signed the bond anticipation notes on Monday night for a total of $15,016,310.

"For any given project, you can only use bond anticipation notes over a two-year period. We then have to permanently bond the project or projects, and start paying principal and interest," said Town Manager Bill Griffin in an e-mail.

There are several reasons for pushing off permanently bonding a project and one or more could apply to the given project, said Griffin. It could be to wait for a point when the budget can better handle the expense. The town could believe there will be a better long-term interest rate if it waits to issue the permanent bond. There is also a cost savings when multiple projects are bundled into one permanent bond, rather than multiple bonds issued over time. Each time the town seeks a permanent bond, there is associated expenses and labor.

"It is best if you can use bond anticipation notes until such time we can issue just one permanent bond," said Griffin.

Like all cities and towns, Cohasset has been advised along in the process by a financial advisor, who handled getting the interest rate quotes for the bond anticipation notes, said Griffin. Banc of America Securities LLC submitted the lowest and winning bid, with an interest rate of 3.6852 percent.

Water Department related projects make up the bulk of the short-term bond with a total of $13,525,000. Another major portion ($600,000) is bonded for the seawall reconstruction. Sewer Department efforts are on the horizon as well; $300,000 for the Little Harbor/Atlantic Ave. sewer, $100,000 for the Deep Run/Rust Way sewer and $40,000 for sewer inflow and infiltration work. Other projects include land acquisition ($184,310), satellite wastewater studies ($100,000), drainage and culvert improvements ($100,000), acquisition of easement ($57,000) and the Beechwood Street sidewalk ($10,000).

Unless otherwise recommended by the financial advisor, the town will likely roll all projects into a large permanent bond issue in August of 2008 (fiscal 2009).

Stella and Bia Bistro granted full liquor licenses

(ABCC) to be instated. An extensive packet of information was sent out to the ABCC this week. The town expects to hear back from the ABCC in four to six weeks, but it may be shorter since Bia Bistro and Stella are both current liquor license holders either here or in Boston, said Town Manager Bill Griffin.

Bia Bistro, in addition to applying for a full liquor license, sought to extend their licensed premises by 300 square feet of dining area. Recent renovation to the Samuel Bates house allowed the restaurant to lease the additional footage. The additional area will give Bia Bistro access to a handicapped bathroom and an additional emergency exit.

"We wanted to stay competitive with other area restaurants and with the expansion we finally have room," said Tristen Houlihan in a phone interview. She and her chef husband Brian Houlihan own Bia Bistro, which opened in December 2003. With the expansion and license, the Houlihans plan to install a small seven-seat bar in the front of the restaurant, "our customers have been asking for it for awhile," she says.

Despite their effort to get a full liquor license to stay competitive, the owners of Bia Bistro think the arrival of Stella "ultimately won't be a bad thing," said Brian Houlihan. They foresee Stella giving more of a focus on Cohasset as a restaurant destination.

"We welcome other people coming down from the city" and surrounding area, said Tristen Houlihan.

Stella will breathe new life into the now vacant hardware building and Stella's owner, chef and manager, Evan Deluty, is no stranger to revitalization efforts.

The original Stella, located on Washington Street in the South End, was one of the first restaurants to be a part of the revival of the Boston neighborhood. When Stella opened its doors in May 2005 there were few dining options in the area. Now, Deluty says, there are 16 restaurants in the surrounding area.

"We were proud to be a part of it, and likewise for Cohasset," said Deluty, "we're committed to building community."

The Cohasset Stella will be the fourth endeavor in the greater Boston area for Deluty and his wife, Candice. His first restaurant Bistro 5 opened in West Medford in 1999. He followed up with opening Torch on Beacon Hill. Then came the South End Stella, named for his first-born daughter. For the Cohasset venture, they have partnered with Cohasset residents, Gregg and Deanna Boyle.

Deluty expects the restaurant to open in early 2008. Stella will take over the 3500 square foot first floor of the hardware building and estimates about 90-seat capacity. It will feature the same menu as the South End Stella.

Liquor licenses by the numbers

Population determines the number of liquor licenses available in a town. Liquor licenses must be approved by the local authority (in Cohasset's case, the Board of Selectmen) and by the ABCC.

Type of License	Total allowed	Number available*
• All alcoholic (restaurant)	14	6
• Beer and wine (restaurant)	5	0
• Package (all alcoholic)	2	0
• Package (beer, malt and wine)	5	3

Water Commission to appeal Avalon discharge permit

At a meeting last Thursday evening Aug. 2), the Water Commission voted unanimously to pursue an appeal of the Department of Environmental Protection permit allowing for on-site wastewater treatment and groundwater discharge granted to Avalon in late July. The Water Commission has until August 20 to file their appeal with the DEP.

Lily Pond, which is the prime source of the town's drinking water, is located approximately one-mile from the proposed Avalon site. The Water Commission submitted comments to the DEP about its concerns with the groundwater discharge permit back in the late spring. The DEP responded to the commission's comments, but did not incorporate them by changing the permit guidelines. An on-site wastewater treatment facility and groundwater discharge will add a significant amount of nutrient to Lily Pond and the surrounding areas, said Water Commissioner John McNabb.

In addition to nutrient-loading concerns, the Water Commission would have liked to see stricter measures enforced for the total nitrogen allowed in the effluent. The Commission would like to see more stringent measures enforced on Avalon. The Water Commission came to its decision after hearing from their environmental engineer consultants from the Norfolk Ram Group and their attorneys.

As an enterprise fund, the Water Department is self-sustaining through user fees and does not use money from the town's general fund, including legal expenses.

This is not the first time the Water Commission has fought the Avalon development on the grounds it will contribute to groundwater pollutants and adversely impact water quality in Lily Pond. In January, after an 18-month lawsuit, the Water Commission was defeated in its appeal of the comprehensive permit. The Appeals Court affirmed the decision of the Land Court that the Commission did not have standing to challenge the comprehensive permit, as collectively they were not a person aggrieved by the Zoning Board of Appeals decision. The decision meant that the Water Commission could not initiate a lawsuit against the project in that respect.

Donation helps Adopt-A-Street Program

Keeping the streets of Cohasset clean and free of litter is the entire community's responsibility. In that spirit, the Cohasset Golf Club has donated $500 to help get the Adopt-A-Street program off the ground.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the funds would be used to meets expenses for gloves, vests and sponsorship signs. The contribution by the Golf Club is in addition to its willingness to landscape and maintain the grade crossings island on North Main Street when the area is turned back over to town jurisdiction.

The program proposed by resident Jim French in the late winter has been met with interest since its official announcement at the end of May.

Three parties have already come forward to participate and keep clean large sections of the town. The Cohasset Triathlon Association has adopted parts of the racecourse to keep clean: Atlantic Avenue from Nichols Road to Sandy Beach, Jerusalem Road between Atlantic Avenue and Forest Avenue and Atlantic Avenue between Sandy Beach and Sandy Cove. Other residents have volunteered to maintain the pocket park between French Memories and Tedeschi's and North Main Street from Cedar Street to the Hingham town line.

Health Inspector Tara Tradd, who is the program coordinator, said she has sent out about eight applications for the Adopt-A-Street program and expects to hear back from them soon. The necessary gear for the program has been ordered with the donated funds and Tradd will hold an informational meeting to go over program protocols and safety measures in the near future.

"Once it gets going, I think it's going to pick up speed," said Tradd.

Organizations, businesses, families and individuals can adopt a street, a portion of a street, park or other public place and keep it free of litter. If interested, contact program coordinator Tara Tradd at the Board of Health office, (781) 383-4116 or by e-mail at tarat@townofcohasset.org.

Grassroots effort drives sustainable living

Cohasset group introduced to Selectmen

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sustainable living. Green. Environmentally conscious. Global warming. Alternative energy.

These words and phrases represent hot button topics everywhere these days. But, here in Cohasset, the words are more than just interesting topics for discussion, many have translated those words into actions. Sustainable Cohasset, a group 40 members strong, has banded together to make strides for sustainability right here in town.

Representatives from Sustainable Cohasset, Chairman Kathryn Earle and member JoAnn Mirise, came before the Board of Selectmen Monday night to open the waves of communication between the private organization and the town.

Sustainable Cohasset was formed as a response to growing concern over global warming. The group intends to get more people involved, whether they are seeking ways to change their lifestyle to lower their carbon footprint or simply to educate themselves on environmental issues, said Earle.

"We're not trying to be an end all and be all, we're just trying to get the conversation going," said Earle, "we want to do all we can to make our community more sustainable."

Sustainable Cohasset was started in October 2006 and in just a few short months it has involved more than 40 residents. The group is a part of a greater South Shore coalition, Sustainable South Shore, and that group is chapter of the Mass Climate Action Network, which involves more than 25 community organizations. Sustainable Cohasset purpose is to educate and inspire others to make incremental or large lifestyle changes.

"We want to do all we can to make our community more sustainable."
— Kathryn Earle, Sustainable Cohasset

Earle described the myriad work the group has assumed to raise awareness in sustainable living. The group is subdivided into several working groups tackling the many angles of the problem. There is a group focusing on school recycling and getting environmental issues into the classroom. The construction of the CO2 Cube, a 27 square foot cube, was completed in conjunction with Sustainable Cohasset. There is another working group organizing a movie series and workshops for the fall. Another group is engaging local political groups (both republican and democrats) to get them involved in the effort.

Earle told the Selectmen they would like to work with them as leaders in the environmental initiative, "it's a good thing because there's a lot of work to do."

Sustainable Cohasset has made visible strides through inserts in town tax bills describing 10 items households can do to be more sustainable. As a fundraiser they will be selling re-useable totes with "Cohasset" on the one side and local businesses on the other.

"We want people to stop using paper and plastic bags," said Mirise and the bags also promote shopping locally, another central focus of the group. The bags will be for sale at the Farmer's Market.

Chairman Gary Vanderweil described America as a nation of "sustainability hogs" and commended the group for their efforts. He recently took an online survey to determine his carbon footprint and found a surprising fact: if everyone on the planet lived the way he lived, it would take 3.3 earths to support us all.

Mirise presented each of the Selectmen with a copy of "Deep Economy: The Wealth of Communities and the Durable Future" by Bill McKibben. The book focuses on how cities and towns can re-structure their communities to be more locally focused, said Mirise. After reading the book, she felt the people who should really be reading it were town leaders. She invited the Selectmen to participate in a book discussion to be held in the early fall.

Sustainable Cohasset meets monthly on the fourth Tuesday of every month at 7p.m. at the High School library. For more information e-mail welcome@sustainablecohasset.org.

Consultants on board seek alternative energy sources

what the 2006 fall Town Meeting appropriation of $20,000 authorized. He feared some of the deliverables outlined by the consultants was outside the scope of the appropriation.

"It's a single focus on alternative energy," said Dormitizer, giving wind, photovoltaics and harnessing tidewaters as examples, "I know that's what's expected of the appropriation."

Included in the presented outline was a school recycling program initiative, following up on the state legislation bills and other education programs. Dormitzer feared the consultants were straying from their charge. When Dormitzer voted at Town Meeting, he felt a specific set of economically viable proposals for alternative energy would be the end result, he said in a phone interview. Despite concern, Dormitzer made clear he supported the concept of alternative energy and would like them to remain focused on specific initiatives that could translate into concrete results.

Selectman Fred Koed suggested Town Counsel review the Town Meeting article and determine if the proposal was within the scope. If Town Counsel determined the article had a problem, it could be corrected at the upcoming fall Town Meeting. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would request Town Counsel to review the article.

The article allowed the AEC to "engage consulting services to assist the Committee to investigate alternative energy options for the Town, pursue grant funding, promote clean energy alternatives within the community, and related duties."

The consultants began by looking at the assets and challenges in the town. Van Hamm saw potential for solar heating, lighting and electricity in the large flat roofs of the middle-high school and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Grants are available, but fairly competitive for that type of project, Van Hamm said.

"All of us are in this together. It's our baby, it's our world, we've got to do something about it."
— Mimi White, Alternative Energy Committee

"The rest of the world see [alternative energy] holistically," said Van Hamm, meaning alternative energy initiatives aren't about one project, but rather about the entire town. Competitive grants at the federal and state level look at what the town as a whole is doing to be more energy efficient.

"All of us are in this together. It's our baby, it's our world, we've got to do something about it," said AEC member Mimi White, "if there's a will there's a way."

Dormitzer suggested the consultants look to "mundane ways" to be more energy efficient, including installing a mechanism to heat cold air coming into the building by using the heat from the outgoing air.

In fiscal 2007, a total of $545,223 was spent on heating and electricity in municipal buildings, $152,090 was spent on motor fuels for the schools and public works departments. A wind turbine and solar panels to feed into town buildings could drastically lower these budget items. The AEC is actively pursuing a wind turbine with the installation of MET tower currently collecting wind data on Turkey Hill and working with the Planning Board to draft a zoning bylaw for a future wind turbine.

"Cohasset has the opportunity to become a sustainable community," said Van Hamm, the population and infrastructure is small enough where energy changes could make a big difference. "If Cohasset cut their cost of fuel to zero, people are going to pay attention."

The Alternative Energy Committee (AEC) was formed officially at the 2005 Annual Town Meeting. Its focus is to investigate alternative energy sources that can be used by the municipality. Members include Mike Bliss, Rod Hobson, Robert Kinscherf, Luciano Lauretti, Jim Shipsky, Mimi White, and Andrew Willard.

Bond anticipation

$15 million in upcoming projects

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In the next couple of years, the town will be bonding about $15 million to fund various projects around town. The projects have already been approved by a Town Meeting vote and will be put into action within the next two years. The bond anticipations notes are short-term loans where the town only pays interest on the amount borrowed; none of the principal is paid off.

The Board of Selectmen voted and signed the bond anticipation notes on Monday night for a total of $15,016,310.

"For any given project, you can only use bond anticipation notes over a two-year period. We then have to permanently bond the project or projects, and start paying principal and interest," said Town Manager Bill Griffin in an e-mail.

There are several reasons for pushing off permanently bonding a project and one or more could apply to the given project, said Griffin. It could be to wait for a point when the budget can better handle the expense. The town could believe there will be a better long-term interest rate if it waits to issue the permanent bond. There is also a cost savings when multiple projects are bundled into one permanent bond, rather than multiple bonds issued over time. Each time the town seeks a permanent bond, there is associated expenses and labor.

"It is best if you can use bond anticipation notes until such time we can issue just one permanent bond," said Griffin.

Like all cities and towns, Cohasset has been advised along in the process by a financial advisor, who handled getting the interest rate quotes for the bond anticipation notes, said Griffin. Banc of America Securities LLC submitted the lowest and winning bid, with an interest rate of 3.6852 percent.

Water Department related projects make up the bulk of the short-term bond with a total of $13,525,000. Another major portion ($600,000) is bonded for the seawall reconstruction. Sewer Department efforts are on the horizon as well; $300,000 for the Little Harbor/Atlantic Ave. sewer, $100,000 for the Deep Run/Rust Way sewer and $40,000 for sewer inflow and infiltration work. Other projects include land acquisition ($184,310), satellite wastewater studies ($100,000), drainage and culvert improvements ($100,000), acquisition of easement ($57,000) and the Beechwood Street sidewalk ($10,000).

Unless otherwise recommended by the financial advisor, the town will likely roll all projects into a large permanent bond issue in August of 2008 (fiscal 2009).

(ABCC) to be instated. An extensive packet of information was sent out to the ABCC this week. The town expects to hear back from the ABCC in four to six weeks, but it may be shorter since Bia Bistro and Stella are both current liquor license holders either here or in Boston, said Town Manager Bill Griffin.

Bia Bistro, in addition to applying for a full liquor license, sought to extend their licensed premises by 300 square feet of dining area. Recent renovation to the Samuel Bates house allowed the restaurant to lease the additional footage. The additional area will give Bia Bistro access to a handicapped bathroom and an additional emergency exit.

"We wanted to stay competitive with other area restaurants and with the expansion we finally have room," said Tristen Houlihan in a phone interview. She and her chef husband Brian Houlihan own Bia Bistro, which opened in December 2003. With the expansion and license, the Houlihans plan to install a small seven-seat bar in the front of the restaurant, "our customers have been asking for it for awhile," she says.

Despite their effort to get a full liquor license to stay competitive, the owners of Bia Bistro think the arrival of Stella "ultimately won't be a bad thing," said Brian Houlihan. They foresee Stella giving more of a focus on Cohasset as a restaurant destination.

"We welcome other people coming down from the city" and surrounding area, said Tristen Houlihan.

Stella will breathe new life into the now vacant hardware building and Stella's owner, chef and manager, Evan Deluty, is no stranger to revitalization efforts.

The original Stella, located on Washington Street in the South End, was one of the first restaurants to be a part of the revival of the Boston neighborhood. When Stella opened its doors in May 2005 there were few dining options in the area. Now, Deluty says, there are 16 restaurants in the surrounding area.

"We were proud to be a part of it, and likewise for Cohasset," said Deluty, "we're committed to building community."

The Cohasset Stella will be the fourth endeavor in the greater Boston area for Deluty and his wife, Candice. His first restaurant Bistro 5 opened in West Medford in 1999. He followed up with opening Torch on Beacon Hill. Then came the South End Stella, named for his first-born daughter. For the Cohasset venture, they have partnered with Cohasset residents, Gregg and Deanna Boyle.

Deluty expects the restaurant to open in early 2008. Stella will take over the 3500 square foot first floor of the hardware building and estimates about 90-seat capacity. It will feature the same menu as the South End Stella.

Liquor licenses by the numbers

Population determines the number of liquor licenses available in a town. Liquor licenses must be approved by the local authority (in Cohasset's case, the Board of Selectmen) and by the ABCC.

Type of License	Total allowed	Number available*
• All alcoholic (restaurant)	14	6
• Beer and wine (restaurant)	5	0

Water Commission to appeal Avalon discharge permit

At a meeting last Thursday evening Aug. 2), the Water Commission voted unanimously to pursue an appeal of the Department of Environmental Protection permit allowing for on-site wastewater treatment and groundwater discharge granted to Avalon in late July. The Water Commission has until August 20 to file their appeal with the DEP.

Lily Pond, which is the prime source of the town's drinking water, is located approximately one-mile from the proposed Avalon site. The Water Commission submitted comments to the DEP about its concerns with the groundwater discharge permit back in the late spring. The DEP responded to the commission's comments, but did not incorporate them by changing the permit guidelines. An on-site wastewater treatment facility and groundwater discharge will add a significant amount of nutrient to Lily Pond and the surrounding areas, said Water Commissioner John McNabb.

In addition to nutrient-loading concerns, the Water Commission would have liked to see stricter measures enforced for the total nitrogen allowed in the effluent. The Commission would like to see more stringent measures enforced on Avalon. The Water Commission came to its decision after hearing from their environmental engineer consultants from the Norfolk Ram Group and their attorneys.

As an enterprise fund, the Water Department is self-sustaining through user fees and does not use money from the town's general fund, including legal expenses.

This is not the first time the Water Commission has fought the Avalon development on the grounds it will contribute to groundwater pollutants and adversely impact water quality in Lily Pond. In January, after an 18-month lawsuit, the Water Commission was defeated in its appeal of the comprehensive permit. The Appeals Court affirmed the decision of the Land Court that the Commission did not have standing to challenge the comprehensive permit, as collectively they were not a person aggrieved by the Zoning Board of Appeals decision. The decision meant that the Water Commission could not initiate a lawsuit against the project in that respect.

Donation helps Adopt-A-Street Program

Keeping the streets of Cohasset clean and free of litter is the entire community's responsibility. In that spirit, the Cohasset Golf Club has donated $500 to help get the Adopt-A-Street program off the ground.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the funds would be used to meets expenses for gloves, vests and sponsorship signs. The contribution by the Golf Club is in addition to its willingness to landscape and maintain the grade crossings island on North Main Street when the area is turned back over to town jurisdiction.

The program proposed by resident Jim French in the late winter has been met with interest since its official announcement at the end of May.

Three parties have already come forward to participate and keep clean large sections of the town. The Cohasset Triathlon Association has adopted parts of the racecourse to keep clean: Atlantic Avenue from Nichols Road to Sandy Beach, Jerusalem Road between Atlantic Avenue and Forest Avenue and Atlantic Avenue between Sandy Beach and Sandy Cove. Other residents have volunteered to maintain the pocket park between French Memories and Tedeschi's and North Main Street from Cedar Street to the Hingham town line.

Health Inspector Tara Tradd, who is the program coordinator, said she has sent out about eight applications for the Adopt-A-Street program and expects to hear back from them soon. The necessary gear for the program has been ordered with the donated funds and Tradd will hold an informational meeting to go over program protocols and safety measures in the near future.

"Once it gets going, I think it's going to pick up speed," said Tradd.

Organizations, businesses, families and individuals can adopt a street, a portion of a street, park or other public place and keep it free of litter. If interested, contact program coordinator Tara Tradd at the Board of Health office, (781) 383-4116 or by e-mail at tarat@townofcohasset.org.

Grassroots effort drives sustainable living

Cohasset group introduced to Selectmen

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sustainable living. Green. Environmentally conscious. Global warming. Alternative energy.

These words and phrases represent hot button topics everywhere these days. But, here in Cohasset, the words are more than just interesting topics for discussion, many have translated those words into actions. Sustainable Cohasset, a group 40 members strong, has banded together to make strides for sustainability right here in town.

Representatives from Sustainable Cohasset, Chairman Kathryn Earle and member JoAnn Mirise, came before the Board of Selectmen Monday night to open the waves of communication between the private organization and the town.

Sustainable Cohasset was formed as a response to growing concern over global warming. The group intends to get more people involved, whether they are seeking ways to change their lifestyle to lower their carbon footprint or simply to educate themselves on environmental issues, said Earle.

"We're not trying to be an end all and be all, we're just trying to get the conversation going," said Earle, "we want to do all we can to make our community more sustainable."

Sustainable Cohasset was started in October 2006 and in just a few short months it has involved more than 40 residents. The group is a part of a greater South Shore coalition, Sustainable South Shore, and that group is chapter of the Mass Climate Action Network, which involves more than 25 community organizations. Sustainable Cohasset purpose is to educate and inspire others to make incremental or large lifestyle changes.

"We want to do all we can to make our community more sustainable."
— Kathryn Earle, Sustainable Cohasset

Earle described the myriad work the group has assumed to raise awareness in sustainable living. The group is subdivided into several working groups tackling the many angles of the problem. There is a group focusing on school recycling and getting environmental issues into the classroom. The construction of the CO2 Cube, a 27 square foot cube, was completed in conjunction with Sustainable Cohasset. There is another working group organizing a movie series and workshops for the fall. Another group is engaging local political groups (both republican and democrats) to get them involved in the effort.

Earle told the Selectmen they would like to work with them as leaders in the environmental initiative, "it's a good thing because there's a lot of work to do."

Sustainable Cohasset has made visible strides through inserts in town tax bills describing 10 items households can do to be more sustainable. As a fundraiser they will be selling re-useable totes with "Cohasset" on the one side and local businesses on the other.

"We want people to stop using paper and plastic bags," said Mirise and the bags also promote shopping locally, another central focus of the group. The bags will be for sale at the Farmer's Market.

Chairman Gary Vanderweil described America as a nation of "sustainability hogs" and commended the group for their efforts. He recently took an online survey to determine his carbon footprint and found a surprising fact: if everyone on the planet lived the way he lived, it would take 3.3 earths to support us all.

Mirise presented each of the Selectmen with a copy of "Deep Economy: The Wealth of Communities and the Durable Future" by Bill McKibben. The book focuses on how cities and towns can re-structure their communities to be more locally focused, said Mirise. After reading the book, she felt the people who should really be reading it were town leaders. She invited the Selectmen to participate in a book discussion to be held in the early fall.

Sustainable Cohasset meets monthly on the fourth Tuesday of every month at 7p.m. at the High School library. For more information e-mail welcome@sustainablecohasset.org.

what the 2006 fall Town Meeting appropriation of $20,000 authorized. He feared some of the deliverables outlined by the consultants was outside the scope of the appropriation.

"It's a single focus on alternative energy," said Dormitizer, giving wind, photovoltaics and harnessing tidewaters as examples, "I know that's what's expected of the appropriation."

Included in the presented outline was a school recycling program initiative, following up on the state legislation bills and other education programs. Dormitzer feared the consultants were straying from their charge. When Dormitzer voted at Town Meeting, he felt a specific set of economically viable proposals for alternative energy would be the end result, he said in a phone interview. Despite concern, Dormitzer made clear he supported the concept of alternative energy and would like them to remain focused on specific initiatives that could translate into concrete results.

Selectman Fred Koed suggested Town Counsel review the Town Meeting article and determine if the proposal was within the scope. If Town Counsel determined the article had a problem, it could be corrected at the upcoming fall Town Meeting. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would request Town Counsel to review the article.

The article allowed the AEC to "engage consulting services to assist the Committee to investigate alternative energy options for the Town, pursue grant funding, promote clean energy alternatives within the community, and related duties."

The consultants began by looking at the assets and challenges in the town. Van Hamm saw potential for solar heating, lighting and electricity in the large flat roofs of the middle-high school and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Grants are available, but fairly competitive for that type of project, Van Hamm said.

"All of us are in this together. It's our baby, it's our world, we've got to do something about it."
— Mimi White, Alternative Energy Committee

"The rest of the world see [alternative energy] holistically," said Van Hamm, meaning alternative energy initiatives aren't about one project, but rather about the entire town. Competitive grants at the federal and state level look at what the town as a whole is doing to be more energy efficient.

"All of us are in this together. It's our baby, it's our world, we've got to do something about it," said AEC member Mimi White, "if there's a will there's a way."

Dormitzer suggested the consultants look to "mundane ways" to be more energy efficient, including installing a mechanism to heat cold air coming into the building by using the heat from the outgoing air.

In fiscal 2007, a total of $545,223 was spent on heating and electricity in municipal buildings, $152,090 was spent on motor fuels for the schools and public works departments. A wind turbine and solar panels to feed into town buildings could drastically lower these budget items. The AEC is actively pursuing a wind turbine with the installation of MET tower currently collecting wind data on Turkey Hill and working with the Planning Board to draft a zoning bylaw for a future wind turbine.

"Cohasset has the opportunity to become a sustainable community," said Van Hamm, the population and infrastructure is small enough where energy changes could make a big difference. "If Cohasset cut their cost of fuel to zero, people are going to pay attention."

The Alternative Energy Committee (AEC) was formed officially at the 2005 Annual Town Meeting. Its focus is to investigate alternative energy sources that can be used by the municipality. Members include Mike Bliss, Rod Hobson, Robert Kinscherf, Luciano Lauretti, Jim Shipsky, Mimi White, and Andrew Willard.

Cohasset has some proud, new grandparents!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ITHACA DEGREES

The following Cohasset residents graduated from Ithaca College. The degrees were awarded in May.

Casey Haight, daughter of David and Elizabeth Haight, and Meredith Bixby, daughter of Brian and Christine Bixby, both graduated with a bachelor of science degrees from Ithaca College's Roy H. Park School of Communications.

Congratulations!

OH BOY!

Jeramie and Shawna DiBona of Cohasset welcomed a baby boy, Brayden Cole, at 10:54 a.m., on Thursday, June 28, 2007 at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. He was 20-1/2 inches long and weighed 7 lbs. and 3 ounces. Brayden has an older brother Del who will be two on August 24th.

NEW ARRIVAL

Trevor and Stacey Cook, of Gloucester, would like to announce the birth of their daughter, Madilyn Elizabeth, born on August 1 at Beverly Hospital. She weighed 8 lbs. 5 oz. and measured 20 inches. Proud grandparents are Tom and Debbie Cook of Cohasset, and Karen and Bob Coffin of Poinciana, Fla.

Lucy Golden Biggs came into the world on July 29, 2007 at 6:26pm.

FALL PHYSICALS

Cohasset High School fall sports physicals will be conducted on Tues. Aug 21st at 7:30 a.m. at the high school in the nurse's office. Students will be seen on a first come first serve basis, the exam will be performed by the school physician.

Any high school student planning to participate in a fall sport needs to have an updated physical on file in the nurse's office prior to the first day of practice. In order for a physical exam to be considered as updated, it needs to have been performed between July 20th 2006 and the present.

If you have any questions please call (781) 383-0853 and leave a message. Your call will be returned as soon as possible.

Madilyn Elizabeth Cook was born on August 1, 2007.

1972 REUNION

Cohasset High School Class of 1972 is planning a reunion for Oct. 26, 2007. More information is available at www.Classmates.com and will be updated regularly. We are trying to locate classmates. Please log on to the Classmates web site and become a member so that we can reach you and you can receive notice of updates. You can also contact the class at our email address, Tessahoc72@yahoo.com. If you are a friend or family member of a CHS 72 graduate who is out of the area, please pass this on!

BABY GIRL

Becky and Andy Biggs welcomed Lucy Golden Biggs into the world on July 29, 2007 at 6:26pm. All four grandparents, Amy and Steve Golden of Cohasset and Susan and Doug Biggs, were in attendance for the birth in Portland, Maine. Lucy weighed 7 lbs. 15 oz. and was 21 and 1/4 inches long. Everyone is doing wonderfully. Lucy plans to make her first trip to Cohasset later this month!

PROMISING STUDENT

Cameron Cope of Cohasset recently completed the Frontiers Program at Worcester Polytechnic Institute. Frontiers is a two-week summer residential program for soon-to-be juniors and seniors interested in science, math and engineering. Cameron completed the electrical and engineering program as well as the music workshop.

In addition, the Mariner has learned that Cameron has won the Rensselaer Medal, which is awarded annually to high school students who have distinguished themselves in mathematics and science.

To be honored with the Rensselaer Medal, a student must be a member of the junior class and the high school's single most promising science and mathematics student.

Congratulations!

IN CZECH

A Denison University student from Cohasset is studying off campus for the fall 2007 semester. Michael Ernst, son of Mary and Robert Ernst, is studying with the Council on International Exchange in Prague, Czech Republic. Ernst, a 2004 graduate of Thayer Academy, is currently a senior economics major at Denison.

More than 100 of Denison's undergraduate students choose to broaden their horizons through off-campus study each semester. In these off-campus programs, students continue to receive full credit toward a Denison degree while pursuing diverse research or academic opportunities.

EMMANUEL

Laura Marks of Cohasset is a recipient of a dean's list award from Emmanuel College in Boston for the spring 2007 semester. Students earning a grade point average of 3.5 or higher are awarded the distinction of dean's list.

LOBSTER ROLLS

The Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St., will hold a lobster roll lunch from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., Tuesday, Aug. 21.

Lobster rolls will be available for pick-up or free local delivery will be provided for orders of five or more. The event is sponsored by Dorothy Bradford, Chapter No. 135, Order of the Eastern Star. The menu includes lobster roll, chips and dessert at the cost of $10 each or chicken roll, chips and dessert at the cost of $8 each.

Orders are required by Wednesday, Aug. 15, and can be made by calling Cynthia Jaymes at 781-545-4547.

SUFFOLK U.

Anthony Truglia of Cohasset was named to the dean's list at Suffolk University in Boston for the spring semester of the 2006-2007 academic year.

That is all for this week. Send me your news no later than Tuesdays by 5 pm.

Custom made in Cohasset

passion. When he graduated in 2005 with a degree in business he knew jewelry was what he wanted to pursue.

The summer following his graduation he started a side business making house calls on the South Shore and creating custom jewelry. As he built a clientele, the side business developed into Matthew's Jewelers and he opened a storefront in Jonathan Livingston Square on King St. (Route 3A) in Cohasset. He was drawn to the Cohasset location because it was centrally located and on a well trafficked, easy to access byway. A year and a half later, he is still going strong.

"I'm mechanically inclined and creative, that's how I got into custom design jewelry," says Shannon. The custom designs provide an outlet for his creative energy, "I like working with people and coming up with projects."

Recently, he designed and created a pendant in the shape of a snake with diamond pave, "any request is doable." Often customers come in armed with a picture or a drawing of a jewelry piece they'd like made and he creates it, with input from the customer.

"I'm mechanically inclined and creative, that's how I got into custom design jewelry."

— Matthew Shannon, owner

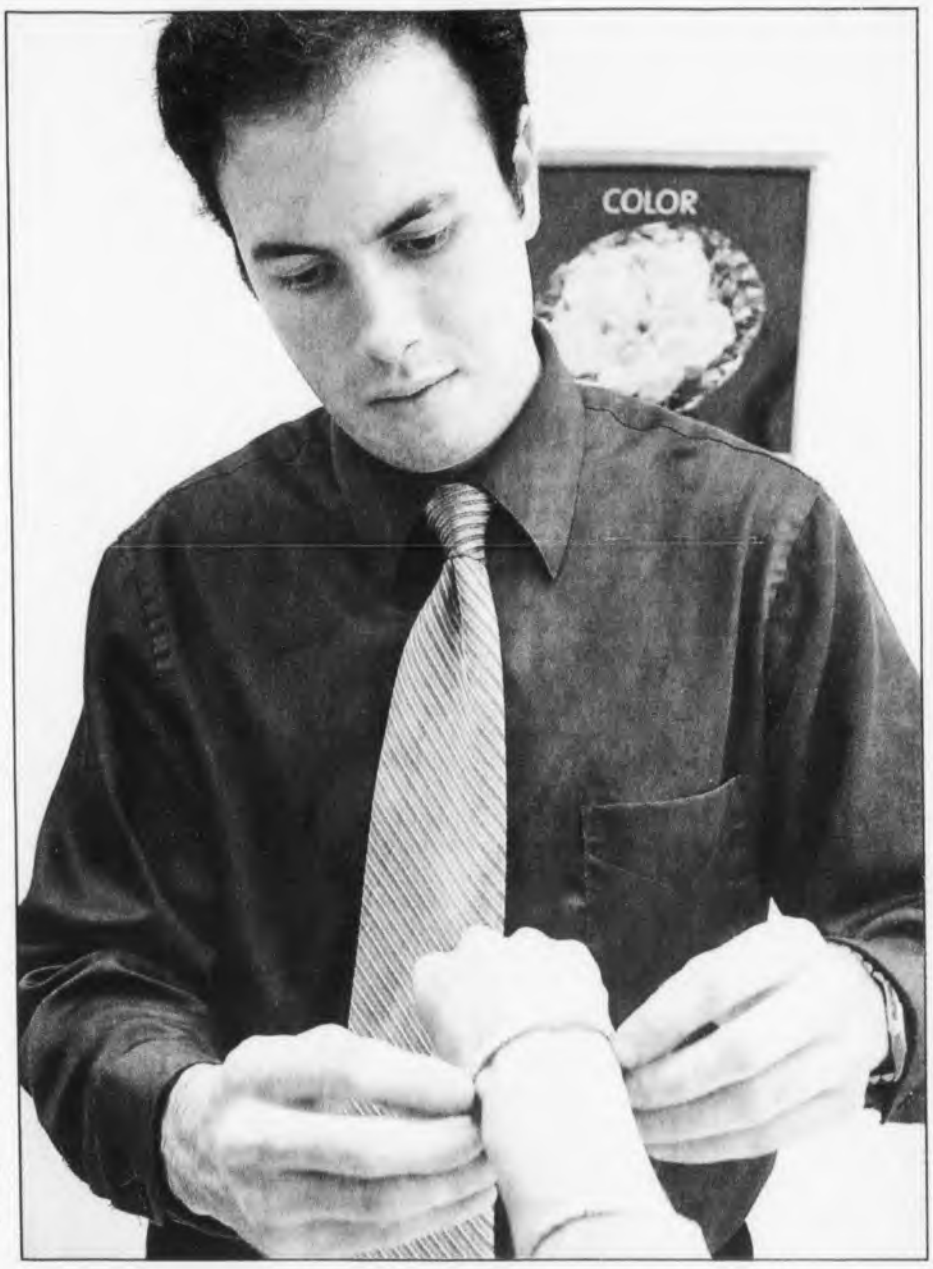
"I'll remake something until the customer is happy with the product," he says, although he admits he hasn't had any of those requests yet, "I'm confident in my products."

He'll take on any challenge in any style from traditional to contemporary. If you have old jewelry that's out of style Shannon is glad to re-work it and create something new. Gemstones or diamonds can be placed in a new, more modern ring setting or, they can re-used in a bracelet.

"All my work is done on the premises, so it gives people a sense of security," says Shannon. If a customer doesn't want to let her prized diamond ring out of sight he tells them, "pull up a chair and watch the diamond be reset."

A complete jeweler's bench is located amidst glass display cases of his handmade jewelry. The bulk of his business is custom jewelry, he says, but he does have an array of ready-to-wear pieces for sale. He also carries a selection of the Cape Cod jewelry line.

In addition to custom jewelry, Shannon will also repair jewelry while a customer waits and provides complimentary jewelry cleaning and inspection to anyone that walks in. In the near future he hopes to diversify and expand his product offerings to more gift items — pens, frames, wedding gifts and engraveable items.



Providing the customer with just the right combination of materials to create a piece is at the forefront of his business philosophy,

"I handpick all the stones for their quality. I provide a selection to fit everyone's specifications, budget and taste. What you find here is nicer than what you see in a mall jewelry store," he explains. What you'll also find is personalized service and someone who "gets to know the customer's taste."

His openness, quality jewelry and handiwork have gained him a following in Cohasset and on the South Shore. "I try to make people happy," he says.

With so many options for jewelry in the South Shore area, Shannon has set his business apart by focusing on custom jewelry, "I think I've found my niche."

Matthew's Jewelers is open Tuesdays through Saturday, 11a.m. to 5p.m. For more information, call 781-383-1200.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Restaurant destination

Restaurants are like antique shops and art galleries – competition can be a good thing, even in a small area.

In our experience when shoppers go "antiquing" or want to look at art (this could be expanded to other types of stores as well!) it is nice to be able to go from place to place and check things out that are within walking distance.

When people go out to eat, it is also nice to have a choice.

As Cohasset Village continues to evolve – the changes being proposed are very positive.

If you plan on eating out in Cohasset Village and have not made a reservation, you will not have far to go to find another restaurant.

Cohasset Hardware, a Village anchor and fixture for many years, has moved off the stage, but already, something new is going to take its place: Stella.

Stella will join Bia Bistro, the Red Lion Inn and Bernard's as places to dine in the Village and just around the corner is Atlantica. Not far is Pacini's on Route 3A and Feng Shui. DiNero's on Hull Street is also within striking distance.

This week Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil suggested Cohasset restaurants band together to initiate a campaign to promote Cohasset as a "restaurant town."

We think that is an excellent idea. Dining out is either at, or near, the top of the list in terms of what people enjoy doing in their free time. Having successful restaurants in town will certainly help the local economy.

Here at the Mariner, we would like to welcome Stella to the table! Thanks for choosing Cohasset and we look forward to your opening in early 2008.

Sustainable living

With Sustainable Cohasset and the Alternative Energy Committee both working toward the goal of a "greener" way of life, our town could become a role model for other small communities.

We have always believed that if everyone paid attention to their own "backyard," so to speak, in terms of recycling; saving car trips; conserving energy, water and other natural resources – the world would become a better place.

Not only is there fairly "big" money to be saved if the town can cut back on heating and lighting costs, but helping the environment through small steps can translate into much larger rewards.

For one thing, we would be creating a culture of environmental awareness and education among our youth in town. One day, they will leave little Cohasset and head out into the wider world.

Mimi White of the Alternative Energy Committee put it best at this week's Selectmen's meeting: "All of us are in this together. It's our baby, it's our world, and we've got to do something about it."

As a side note, we have shifted over to the reusable shopping bags that are available at most Supermarkets. We are discouraged when we shop that more people have not taken that step.

However, for those of you who may be considering using the reusable bags – there is an added benefit. We have noticed that the "baggers" seem to like them. Once we started, we have found that we always have a bagger come to the checkout when he or she sees them. We have not had to bag our own groceries in months!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Road to Recovery drivers urgently needed

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is a plea to my fellow area residents for volunteer drivers for our Road to Recovery hotline that provides rides for cancer patients to doctor's offices, treatment centers, etc.

Last week, while telephoning our drivers for rides, I was terribly discouraged because I could not arrange rides for several people. Our list of wonderful drivers has dramatically diminished for various reasons; health of relatives or themselves, vacations, Father Time has caught up with some of our older drivers who have been driving for 20 years or more, etc., etc. We have 13 towns, from Quincy to Duxbury, for which we provide rides.

Last week, a gentleman from Cohasset, newly retired, has volunteered to drive for us and he will go to Boston (MGH, Dana-Farber, etc.) and we are so very grateful.

If anyone can drive just one day a month, either locally to such places as Crown Colony, the Stetson Building, South Shore offices, we would be delighted to have you join us. The satisfaction you will receive is enormous as these people are so appreciative.

Looking forward to hearing from you at our Road to Recovery (ACS) telephone 781-749-2535. We answer the phone from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., Mondays through Fridays, and there is an answering machine other times.

Quick response appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to publicly thank Mark Brennan, special assistant to the Town Manager for Greenbush Engineering, for his quick response in resolving an issue I had with my driveway as a result of the repaving project on Forest Avenue.

I sent Mr. Brennan an email on Friday, July 27, identifying the issue and asked for his assistance in resolving the problem. Monday morning, July 30, I received a phone call from Mr. Brennan acknowledging the problem and his recommended solution. (He had already driven by my property that morning prior to making the phone call.) That afternoon I received a second phone call from Mr. Brennan informing me the corrective action had been implemented.

I am sure Mr. Brennan has received more than his fair share of complaints regarding the various projects going on in our town. It seems appropriate he should also share in the accolades as well.

Don't let history repeat itself

TO THE EDITOR:

In responding to a recent Mariner commentary, I can't believe that you, Martin Nee, as member of the Storm Water Study Committee, can advocate such a solution for Treats Pond. To add the polluted water from your drain at 109Atlantic Ave., stated in your commentary, seems ill-advised and self-defeating. The flooding at Atlantic Avenue is a separate issue and may be solved by the impending sewer project.

The harbor is already declared polluted, so why add to it? That cleanup so far has no solution and will cost many thousands more than the so-called draining of Treats Pond.

The town has tried many so-called moneysaving projects, only to find that eventually the best solution had to be used, costing many dollars more.

Don't let history repeat itself.

Tips for safe bicycle travel

SAFETY COUNTS

POLICE CHIEF JAMES HUSSEY

Bicycling is a fun and healthy exercise. Before riding your bicycle on roadways, take time to learn the rules of the road. Many bicyclists are seriously injured in accidents because they are less protected than drivers of automobiles and/or they do not practice safe riding skills.

By observing Massachusetts bicycle laws and following safety rules, your bicycling will be enjoyable and more importantly, safer! Here are a couple of safety tips that will help you share the road with motor vehicles:

MOTORISTS:

Before turning right, check for bicycles in your right-side blind spot by looking over your shoulder. Bicycles are vehicles, and you must yield to them as to any other vehicle in the road before turning.

Never turn immediately after a passing cyclist, s/he may be going faster than you think.

Be additionally cautious when turning left. Drivers turning left in front of oncoming cyclists cause a large percentage of car/bicycle crashes.

Look for bicyclists whenever you exit a vehicle, whether you are a driver or a passenger, in your own car or in a taxi. By law, the person exiting the vehicle must wait before opening a door into traffic. Failure to do so results in significant numbers of injuries every year. Please help eliminate these avoidable events by looking first.

BICYCLISTS

Wear a bike helmet at all times. The most serious bike injuries are to the head.

Keep your bike in good shape — inspect it before each ride.

Always let cars and people go first.

Slow down and check traffic at all corners.

Keep both hands on the handlebars except when doing turn signals.

Walk across busy streets.

Wear reflective clothing — even during daytime hours.

Ensure you bicycle is equipped reflectors and proper auxiliary lighting if you plan on riding when it is dark outside.

Due to the extensive construction that we have seen around town, it is crucial for both motorists and bicyclists to pay particular attention to ever changing road conditions

Understanding preempt in this context

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

We can't emphasize enough that we should all consider the train right of way as an operating railroad.

What is red, green and sometimes yellow? – Of course, it's the new traffic light at Forest/Main/Lower King intersection. This past Monday the new shiny set of operating traffic lights were turned from blinking to regular operation for the first time. These traffic lights have an interesting feature that allows the fire department emergency vehicles preempt the lights. So, what does preempt mean in this context? It means that, regardless of the state of the traffic lights, when a fire vehicle approaches, the lights will turn red all directions. Remember, when you see all lights turn red; don't even try a right on red. You may find yourself coming face to face with a giant red fire truck.

There is also another set of lights on Lower King Street at the tracks that you will see as you approach the intersection from Route 3A. These lights will be green unless a train is coming, in which case they will turn red. When these lights on Lower King Street turn red, the lights at N. Main from Lower King Street will turn green and stay green for a while to let cars exit from the track area. This is also called preemption. But in this case the train causes the preemption to the regular light operating patterns.

Greenbush crossing testing – CBB is currently finishing "static" testing of the rail crossings. For static testing the actions of the trains and cars are simulated to do a preliminary test for the functionality of the crossing gates and the associated control equipment. When this is complete sometime this month, from Scituate to Braintree, dynamic testing will begin. For dynamic testing a locomotive and control car will start from the layover facility in Scituate. Each day this test train will proceed at 15 mph to a zone where the crossings in that zone will be tested. The train will go back and forth over the crossing starting at a slow speed (15 mph). When the gates are proven to operate correctly, the speed will be increased a small amount and the crossing will be retested. This will continue until the maximum speed required at that crossing has been successfully tested. (The maximum speed in Cohasset is nearly 60 mph). At this point, the test train will go to the next zone to be tested and the testing sequence will be repeated, from slow speed to the highest speed. Once a crossing is completed, that crossing will be certified by the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities, Transportation Division as operable and ready for use. At the end of each day, the test train will return to Scituate at 15 mph ready to start again the next day. During this entire testing process, horns will be blown. It is estimated that dynamic testing will take about three weeks once it starts. The exact starting date is not known at this time.

We can't emphasize enough that we should all consider the train right of way as an operating railroad. It is not a safe place. All gates and warning lights must be followed for your own safety.

Final installment of the Jacobs Meadow analysis – In previous articles we've spoken about Jacobs Meadow, where it is, how water comes into it from Stewart and James brooks and how it gets out to the harbor in the channel adjacent to the Legion Hall on Summer Street. If we want to slow down the quick arrival of storm water to Jacobs Meadow, this will reduce the amount of storm water stored in the meadow. But, then we need to find a way to temporarily store storm water upstream. How can this be accomplished, you ask? There has always been storm water that came from the surrounding land into James and Stewart brooks and then to the harbor. But, also, there is no doubt, that the development which has occurred in the town over the years has added impervious surfaces and increased the amount of storm water that passes down to the meadow and thus, to the harbor.

There are two ways storm water be stored upstream. First is by adding small distributed storm water storage facilities, like rain gardens, dry wells and the like, spread throughout the watershed. Each of these will store and possibly filter a small amount of storm water. But, if storage is constructed in many areas, it can have a substantial total effect on the storm water entering Jacobs Meadow (as well as other watersheds). Second, is by creating larger storage areas where storm water can be collected in substantial amounts and slowly released downstream. The hold and release process is called "desynchronization," because it delays (or desynchronizes) the arrival of storm water into to Jacobs Meadow. A by-product of this storage is that the longer the water sits the greater the opportunity to recharge the aquifer. By having the storm water arrive in the meadow at a later time, some of the previous storm water will already had a chance to exit to the harbor. This will reduce the maximum level of water in Jacobs Meadow resulting from a major rain event. Changes in the Town's requirements for handling storm water for new developments will also offer a measure of control over future increases in storm water flow. But, this will not reduce the current storm water impacts. But, it will help keep them from getting worse.

Theoretically there are several places where larger flood storage might be accomplished. But, each site has its own difficulties and costs. For example, we have spent some time looking a Sanctuary Pond as a possible storm water impoundment area. However, this land is not owned by the Town, but by the Trustees of the Reservations. The Trustees' permission and support would be necessary for any work to be done on its property. Some of the land around Sanctuary Pond is rather low lying and a great deal of care would be necessary to avoid affecting these properties. Construction elements recently placed by the Greenbush rail line will also need to be evaluated, since some of them are quite low. Detailed engineering analysis and survey data must be done before it can be determined what the possible benefits might be for flood water storage in Sanctuary Pond. And of course there's the issue of costs for engineering, permitting and construction.

Likewise, other areas for potential flood storage might be an area within James Brook called the "Wiggle." The wiggle is on the Route 3A side of the tracks, behind the ball fields and between Fair Oaks and Rocky Lane neighborhoods. Although this is mostly Town owned property, there are numerous permitting hurdles that make this area far less than an easy project. An area called the "Pikel" is behind the new library and behind the Music Circus parking lot. Again this is Town owned, but not an easy project. In summary, there is substantial engineering, permitting and construction costs associated with large sized storm water retention areas. So, as one wise sage once said, "It ain't easy."

Forest Avenue, continued – Well, we reported last week that the base paving in the area currently being reclaimed and graded would be done by the end of this week. Unfortunately, unexpected delays on the part of the paving contractor have now pushed the base paving into the middle of next week, weather permitting. The last 2,300 feet of Forest Avenue near Jerusalem Road has been cold planed in anticipation of final paving which should occur in late August or early September. Please be aware that there are structures in the street that are exposed and painted. Please proceed slowly and with caution over these hazards. Lastly, you have probably noticed that granite curb is being set adjacent to the area recently paved. As the base paving continues, so will the curb setting. The sidewalk construction will soon follow the curb.

The Town truly appreciates your patience during this flurry of activity. In the end it will all be worth it. Please, please be careful; while driving through this construction area.

Talk show covers a bridge collapse

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

This is Windy Pundit, your host on Talk Radio, coming to you from Minnesota where an important bridge across the Mississippi River in downtown Minneapolis has just collapsed. We are fortunate to have with us the head of the National Transportation Safety Board who is investigating the incident. Tell me, sir, what was the cause of this tragic collapse.

I don't know. I just got here. Which way is the bridge?

I think it's over that way. I hear you've ruled out terrorism as a cause. Why have you ruled it out?

I haven't ruled anything out. I just got here. Can somebody call me a cab?

Why do you suspect terrorism is behind it?

I don't suspect anything yet. I just got here. Hey, cabbie!

Thank you very much, sir, for that revealing interview. And now it's your turn. Talk Radio, what say you?

Boy, you let that guy off easy. That was a cover-up if I ever heard one. I can tell he knows more than he's telling. Why was he in such a hurry to get away?

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

I agree with that first caller. Where did that guy come from anyway? Is he another friend of George Bush. Was he appointed so he wouldn't reveal that George lied when he said Iraq had weapons of mass destruction? He did, you know.

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

I have a friend who lives four blocks from the bridge and he tells me just the other day he saw a man who looked like an Islamofascist terrorist walking across the bridge as big as life. I tell you they're here!

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

That guy who just called was right on target. Isn't Minnesota the place where the Islamofascist cab drivers won't allow Americans to ride in their taxis with a six-pack of Bud Light? What more evidence do you need?

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

Don't blame George Bush for appointing that guy to the NTSB. He was appointed by Bill Clinton as part of the deal that is going to rig his state's vote for Hillary in the 1908 election. Mark my words.

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

I drove over that bridge in 1984 and I distinctly remember thinking to myself I'd better hurry and get across before this bridge collapses. Even then I could feel it swaying and heard it creaking. See, I was right!

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

When are they going to replace the bridge? And who is going to pay for it? Will it be with our hard-working taxpayers' hard-earned money? Don't you think it's time to privatize all our bridges? The free market works best every time.

Thanks for the call. Talk Radio, what say you?

I've been out of touch all day. Can you fill me in with the important events of the day? Has Lindsay Lohan gone to jail yet?

Thanks for the call. Believe me. Thanks for the call.

Stress make me look fat?

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

The key difference between me and the rest of my family is in the way we deal with stress.

I think a person's nightmares say a lot about him. Mine usually involve someone trying to kill me. I'm being chased by people with guns and as I'm running away I suddenly become buoyant, floating just off the ground so I can't get any traction. Of course I'm not light enough to fly to safety, so I dodge bullets for 20 minutes and curse fickle gravity, finally waking in a sweat with my jaw clenched and my eyes wide open, staring at huge insects on our bedroom ceiling that slowly morph into familiar beams, shadows, and huge insects.

I have manly, corn-fed nightmares that anyone would be proud to call their own. Meanwhile the scariest dream my wife can recall involved pastries. Either she had too few or too many — I don't remember, because as soon as she mentioned éclairs I stopped listening. Then I've got the kids complaining about clown dreams and "going to school naked" dreams — Oh please. I'd be so relieved to find myself naked in school rather than fleeing a nuclear holocaust. I'd probably have the presence of mind to dream that Margot Rhinelander was naked too.

The key difference between me and the rest of my family is in the way we deal with stress. I've always felt it was more considerate to internalize anxiety, to suppress it during the day and only express it subconsciously at night by mistaking my wife's leg for a gila monster and clubbing it with a lamp. My wife disagrees. There's very little delay between the moment she feels stressed out and the moment I hear about it. She and the kids are constantly letting off steam, which I capture in bottles and tuck away for later. Then at night they visit the Kingdom of the Chocolate Swing Sets while I'm trapped in the Land of Unexpected Cliffs.

Since I've never learned to deal properly with stress the obvious thing to do is avoid it in the first place. But there's a tricky balance to strike here, because often our most stressful experiences are the most exciting. Years ago I made gadgets for commercials and movies and operated them on set. When they worked in Take 1 there was no prouder feeling in the world. But when your little mechanical talking turtle flatly refused to say "Turtle Wax gives a hard shell finish!" you could hear the money blowing out the sound stage door as 50 people stood around watching you tinker frantically under the hot lights. Finally you'd mop your brow, nod to the director, the camera would roll again, and your baby would shout, "Turtle Wax needs the hard sell!"

Night shoots are what eventually did me in. Music videos have shoestring budgets, and are notorious for shooting all night and expecting the crew to work all day preparing for the next night. One morning after 72 hours without rest I actually fell asleep for a few seconds as I was walking to the post office. My head bobbed forward and I woke up to find I hadn't broken stride, and felt rather refreshed to boot. Eighteen months of excitement at that level was about all I could take.

College exam week was always tough on the psyche too, but at least I wasn't alone. One of my five suitemates was a math major and would talk very agitatedly in his sleep about number lines. As his closest friends we would of course torment him any way we could, disproving his nonsensical theorems while he thrashed around in his bunk. If they did anything similar to me they never mentioned it, but during my final aeronautics exam I wrote "Weiners" for about half the answers before I realized what I was doing, so I'm a little suspicious.

I may fall asleep while walking but I've never walked in my sleep the way my youngest daughter does. That's always a freaky thing to witness. It would be cool if she shuffled around like a zombie with her arms out and eyes closed the way you'd expect, but she doesn't. She just walks down the stairs and circles the kitchen as if she's looking for something. In her case it's always the bathroom, and once I clue in and fly her over the target it's like someone turned on a fire hose.

It's fascinating to think how powerful even an unconscious brain must be to force someone on her feet and send her wandering around the house just to avoid wetting the bed — something that same brain had no qualms about only two years ago. If I could harness that energy somehow rather than waste it on night terrors, think how much yard work I could get done while I slept. I'd just have to warn the neighbors not to shoot the guy in the Terminator pajamas with the chain saw.

Greenbush train tests expected to start up again Aug. 13

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

All five towns served by the Greenbush commuter rail system have requested that the entire line be declared a "quiet zone." This means that whistles won't be sounded except in an emergency.

Motorists, walkers, bicyclists, joggers, children, and others who make their way through Cohasset — beware!

Greenbush test train runs are scheduled to start again on Aug. 13, nearly three months after the first Scituate to Boston run on May 19. Test runs that were expected to resume earlier this month were delayed because the rail grinding operation has taken longer than anticipated. The targeted start date for Greenbush train service is Sept. 29.

Test trains may operate at any time, day or night, seven days a week, and will not run according to a set schedule. This means that adults, children, and pets should stay off and away from the tracks at all times and that vehicles should not stop on the tracks under any circumstances. During these runs, the signal and grade crossing warning systems will be tested.

The clear message is to stay off the tracks. "No Trespassing" and "No Dumping" "police take notice" signs have been posted on the fences running along the tracks to further drive home the importance of keeping off the tracks. Anyone caught walking on railroad property, including the train tracks, or near or inside the tunnel area for any reason whatsoever runs the risk of personal injury or death and also arrest.

MBTA Transit Police and local police are pledging to arrest anyone who ignores this directive. Local police departments and the MBTA are relying on residents to report people they see trespassing on the Greenbush line.

The Cohasset Police Department has adopted a "no tolerance" policy with regard to rail safety. This means that anyone caught on the tracks or inside the fences or the tunnel could be arrested for trespassing, which comes with a $100 fine under state law. Parents are urged to discuss train safety with their children.

The dangers of trespassing cannot be overstated. A commuter rail train traveling at 55 mph takes a mile to come to a complete stop — as compared with 200 feet for a car moving at that same speed.

Trains have the right of way and can run at any time. The trains are wider than they appear, with a three-foot hangover on both sides of the tracks.

The public is urged to watch out for multiple trains on tracks in Hingham, Cohasset, Braintree, Weymouth, and Scituate and to be alert at all times to the potential presence of trains on the tracks at grade crossings and the potential hazard to trespassers who live near or walk along the rail right-of-way. Commuter trains run quieter and faster than many people realize.

All five towns served by the Greenbush commuter rail system have requested that the entire line be declared a "quiet zone." This means that whistles won't be sounded except in an emergency. The final step in the process, gaining Federal Railroad Administration approval, is in the works.

In the meantime, train horns will be sounded at grade crossings because the warning systems are not yet operational and the quiet zone is not yet in place. "Horns will also be sounded as required for warning workers on the track," said Greenbush Director of Construction James L. Eng." Railroad flagmen will stop roadway traffic at grade crossings during train operations until the warning systems are tested and placed into operation."

Train whistles are ordinarily blown when approaching a grade crossing, but due to the many grade crossings within a short distance along the Greenbush line, a waiver is being sought to provide relief from incessant whistle blowing.

The MBTA will offer 12 round trips on the Greenbush line between Scituate and South Station on weekdays, except holidays. The trains will run between 5:45 a.m. and 11 p.m. A one-way trip from Scituate to South Station will take 59 minutes.

"No Trespassing, No Dumping" signs have been posted along the tracks.

Train facts and warnings

The Operation Lifesaver rail safety program provides information to the public to help prevent accidents. OL offers the following train facts and safety tips:

- Modern trains are quieter than ever, with no telltale "clackety-clack." An approaching train will always be closer and moving faster than you think.
- Railroad tracks, trestles, yards, and equipment are private property.
- Trespassers are subject to arrest and fines.
- Never drive, ride a bike, or walk around a lowered railroad crossing gate.
- Always wait for the train to pass and for the gates to be raised.
- Trains cannot stop quickly. A freight train moving at 55 mph, or an eight-car passenger train moving at 60 mph, can take a mile or more to stop.
- Don't walk, run, cycle, or operate all-terrain vehicles (ATVs) on railroad property, including tracks, or through tunnels.
- Cross the tracks only at designated pedestrian or roadway crossings.
- Never play or walk on the tracks.
- Observe all warning signs and signals.
- Don't hunt, fish, or jump around railroad trestles. There is only enough clearance on tracks for a train to pass. Trestles are not meant to be sidewalks or pedestrian bridges.
- Don't attempt to hop aboard railroad equipment at any time. A slip of the foot can cost you a limb, or your life.
- Be aware that trains do not always follow set schedules. Any time is train time.
- Don't skateboard or Rollerblade on station platforms or in parking lots.
- Always stand behind the yellow platform stripe.

Operation Lifesaver is a national, non-profit, public education program dedicated to ending collisions, deaths, and injuries at grade crossings and along railroad rights-of-way.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. Beacon Hill Roll Call records local representatives' votes on one roll call and local senators' votes on five roll calls and local from the week of July 30-August 3.

LANDLOCKED FILLED TIDELANDS (H 3757, S 2306)

House 119-32, Senate 35-0, approved different versions of a bill giving the state's Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) the statutory authority to exempt development and construction on "landlocked filled tidelands" from the strict licensing requirements of Chapter 91 - the state law that protects the public's access to the state's waterways. Chapter 91 dates back to the Colonial era and was designed to allow the public access to the ocean and ponds for "fishing, fowling and navigation." Many of these waterways, over a period of time and as populations grew, were filled in and developed. DEP in 1990 began exercising the regulatory authority to exempt these landlocked tidelands. The Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) in February 2007 issued a decision stating that DEP did not have this power and had exceeded its authority. Supporters of the bill said that the legislation would simply ensure that DEP is granted the authority under state law and can continue to exempt these landlocked tidelands that have been filled in and developed over the centuries and no longer have any meaningful connection or access to the waterfront. They argued that without the law, the court ruling jeopardizes the title and legality of thousands of acres of development including Fenway Park, MIT, Massachusetts General Hospital and many private homes. Opponents of the bill said that the proposed legislation would fly in the face of the court's decision and take power away from local officials to negotiate with developers in order to protect their communities. They argued that all of these developments should require special permits regardless of whether the waterways are now landlocked. The differences between the House and Senate version will likely be ironed out by a conference committee. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill giving DEP the statutory authority to exempt development and construction on landlocked filled tidelands from the strict licensing requirements of Chapter 91. A "No" vote is against the bill).

SALES TAX HOLIDAY ON AUGUST 11 AND 12 (H 2876)

Senate 33-4, approved and Gov. Deval Patrick signed into law a bill allowing consumers to buy most products that cost under $2,500 on Saturday, August 11 and Sunday, August 12 without paying the state's five percent sales tax. Supporters of the bill said that the holiday would boost retail sales and noted that consumers over the past three years have saved millions of dollars during similar tax-free holidays. They argued that the state's sales tax revenue loss would be offset by increased revenue from the meals and gas tax generated by shoppers who would eat out and drive on those two days. Some opponents of the bill said that the holiday actually generates little additional revenue for stores because consumers would buy the products even without the tax-free days. They said that the Legislature should be looking at broader, deeper tax relief and not a tiny tax-free holiday. Others said that legislators should not vote for this tax holiday when they have not yet restored all the local aid, education and other program cuts made over the past few years. (A "Yes" vote is for the tax-free holiday. A "No" vote is against the tax free holiday).

MAKE AUGUST SALES TAX HOLIDAY A PERMANENT ONE (H 2876)

Senate 5-31, rejected an amendment establishing a permanent annual two-day sales tax holiday in August. The amendment would require the Department of Revenue to choose the dates of the holiday and announce them by July 15 each year. Amendment supporters said that it is time to make this "win-win" holiday a permanent one. They argued that a permanent holiday would give consumers the opportunity to plan purchases in advance and not have to sit around and see if the Legislature approves the holiday each year. They noted that this year's holiday was not signed into law until August 2 and does not give consumers adequate notice. Amendment opponents said that it is fiscally irresponsible to approve a permanent holiday without regard to the economic situation of the state during a specific year. They argued that the Legislature should look at the state's economy and revenues each year and decide one year at a time whether the state can afford a sales tax holiday. Some noted that a permanent holiday would hurt year-round retail sales because many consumers would hold off until August to make big purchases. (A "Yes" vote is for establishing a permanent annual two-day sales tax holiday in August. A "No" vote is against establishing it).

PROHIBIT CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENT REDUCING INCOME TAX RATE (H 2876)

Senate 31-5, supported Senate President Therese Murray's ruling prohibiting consideration of an amendment reducing the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent over two years. Voters in 2000 approved a gradual reduction of that year's 5.85 percent tax to five percent by January 2003 but the Legislature in July 2002 froze the rate at 5.3 percent. Murray ruled that the amendment is "beyond the scope" of the sales tax holiday bill being debated and should not be allowed on the floor for debate. Supporters of Murray's ruling said that the amendment should not be allowed because the tax holiday bill does not deal with income tax rates. Opponents of Murray's ruling said that both the amendment and the bill are related because they deal with taxes. They argued that it is unfair and undemocratic that the senate president is prohibiting a vote on this clearly-related income tax rate reduction. (A "Yes" vote is for Murray's ruling prohibiting consideration of an amendment reducing the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent. A "No" vote is against Murray's ruling and favors allowing consideration of the income tax reduction).

PERMANENTLY EXEMPT ENERGY-EFFICIENT APPLIANCES FROM SALES TAX (H 2876)

Senate 5-32, rejected an amendment permanently exempting energy-efficient appliances and products from the state's five percent sales tax. The products and appliances would include air conditioners, refrigerators, freezers, dishwashers, washers, dryers, dehumidifiers, ceiling fans and light bulbs. Amendment supporters said that this exemption would save millions of dollars for consumers and would also be good for the environment. Some amendment opponents said that this exemption is unnecessary because consumers can avoid the tax by purchasing these products and appliances during the August tax-free holiday. Others said that the Committee on Telecommunications and Energy is considering comprehensive energy legislation and argued that members should reject this amendment until the broader bill has a public hearing and works it way through the Legislature. (A "Yes" vote is for permanently exempting energy-efficient appliances and products from the state's five percent sales tax. A "No" vote is against the permanent exemption).

Tips for safe bicycle travel

SAFETY COUNTS

POLICE CHIEF JAMES HUSSEY

By observing Massachusetts bicycle laws and following safety rules, your bicycling will be enjoyable and more importantly, safer!

FROM SAFETY, PAGE 8

and construction zones on our main streets. Operators of motor vehicles have to be attentive and remember that they are sharing the road with bicyclists.

As the town and the MBTA work to make the railroad grade crossing on North Main Street (near the Hingham line) safe for bicyclists, it is imperative that bicyclists stop and walk their bikes across the grade crossing, as we have had several bicycle accidents at this location.

In closing, Massachusetts State Law permits bicyclists to travel on sidewalks in the interest of safety. In general, it is more appropriate and prudent to bicycle in the street with the flow of traffic, and Cohasset is making every effort to make our streets safe and comfortable for bicycling, although it is recognized that there are times when sidewalk riding will be used, for example, with young children. If you are a bicyclist using the sidewalk, be sure to use extreme caution when encountering pedestrians, and try to avoid riding on the sidewalk in the village business area, as people are entering and exiting storefronts.

These tips, combined with patience and courtesy on the road, will ensure that we all enjoy the last weeks of summer.

Cohasset officials join Keating in school violence prevention

It can happen here - it can happen anywhere.

There are steps, however, that towns and parents, can take to keep school violence like what happened in Littleton, Colo., or on the campus of Virginia Tech from coming to Norfolk County.

That was the message national school violence expert and lecturer Dr. Scott Poland brought to a meeting with more than 110 school and police officials from Cohasset and across Norfolk County, which was convened this spring by Norfolk District Attorney William R. Keating.

Keeping Cohasset schools safe - Norfolk District Attorney William Keating brought in a national school safety expert to meet with leaders from Cohasset and across the county.

Parents, teachers, principals, and guidance counselors need to find ways to keep every student connected, and to know what is going on in their lives. When the National Institute of Mental Health examined the roots of school shootings, Dr. Poland said he could sum up their findings in one sentence: "School connection is the key to everything."

Dr. Poland worked with the parents of the Columbine, Colo. students after the school shooting, which took place there. Those parents, he said, had a succinct message for what works and what doesn't: "Reach out. Don't preach."

Adults who share the lessons which hindsight has taught them about high school accomplishes little; getting students to open up about what is happening in the school and what is happening in their lives does.

After the March 2005 school shooting in Red Lake, Minn., that left 10 dead, 39 of the 315 students at the school told authorities that they knew at least a small amount about the plot before it happened. None of those 39 students had a line of communication with an adult before the shooting started. Of school shooters, Poland said, "They always tell their friends, and always in detail."

Two-thirds of school shooters have been identified as victims of bullying, Poland said. He praised anti-bullying programs based on changing the culture of the school in terms of how bystanders react to bullying events, which is the model used in the program offered by the Norfolk District Attorney's Office.

Representatives from Cohasset who attended the meeting included Mike Gill, Assistant Principal of the Middle and High schools; Kate Nelligan, Adjustment Counselor, and Lisa Matos, School Resource Officer.

Cohasset grad has uncommon quest

sioned a set of four quests: one for the village, one for the harbor, one for the common and one kid-friendly version. But, after she partnered up with the Historical Society and scouring their archives she realized just how lofty a goal that was.

"I thought I would rather do one really good quest, rather than rushing through," she says and decided to focus on the buildings and landmarks in the Village and Common area.

"There was a lot of historical background on the Common," says Virginia. Under the advisement of Lynne DeGiacomo, Executive Administrator of the Historical Society, Virginia sifted through ancient town reports, newspaper articles, written accounts of events, letters and speeches to find the most interesting facts to illuminate pieces of the village's history. As is the way with most research, she uncovered more information than she was able to put into the Quest so she was able to choose the most interesting facts from it all.

"You don't always get to use these primary sources," she says, so she relished in the chance. As history is her favorite subject and a possible college major, she found the research neither boring nor the most difficult part, "I liked doing the research and it took a lot of time, but the creating the puzzle was harder."

DeGiacomo attests to Virginia's dedication to the project, "she extensively used our archives, and was working on it in the spring with a full class schedule and varsity softball," she says, "[the project] is a very positive thing for the Historical Society. We love to mentor, sponsor, and supervise others in historical research."

The Quest takes participants from the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Ripley Road through the Common and the Village ending up at the Historical Society building on South Main Street — two buildings that have undergone significant transformations in recent years. Virginia names the library (which is the former Osgood School) as her favorite landmark on the tour because "it's changed so much. I learned about all the history even before I went to [elementary] school there."

A historical narrative brings to life the landmarks along the way. Old-time photographs depict the landmarks as they once were; most are not so different from today. Walkers read up on the storied history of Cohasset's most well known buildings and seek out answers to questions at each stop along the way. Correct answers to the questions then give an answer to a final question to be filled in at the end of the quest. She estimates, from trial runs performed by her friends and fellow Girl Scouts, the quest to take about an hour to complete.

A kick off party next Wednesday will mark the official availability of the Quest. People are welcome to stop by the South Shore Community Center any time between 10:30a.m. and 1p.m.. Pictures from the day will be used in Virginia's final presentation to the Girl Scouts of America as it considers her application for a Gold Award. Like becoming an Eagle Scout in Boy Scouting, a Gold Award is highest honor in the organization. Before even beginning this final project, Virginia had to earn a number of badges and awards.

Virginia put her love and skill of softball to work in coaching little league softball to receive a Leadership Award. Then, she set out to earn a Gold Career Award, which involves spending 40 hours doing a career related activities. Virginia completed this aspect through her extensive college search.

Upon earning both awards, she presented her project idea to a panel of Girl Scouts and got approval to begin work. In order to qualify, the project must take at least 65 hours of volunteer work; it must have longevity, affect the community and show leadership. A post-project interview in September will determine if Virginia is awarded the Gold Award.

Unlike so many girls, Virginia and some of her closest friends have kept up with Girl Scouts through high school. "it was a way for us to stay close." Her troop began together as brownies in the first grade. Never one for camping and the great outdoors, Virginia was attracted to the community service aspects of girl scouting.

"I like doing community service and Girl Scouts was good way to instigate it," she says, "this project is the culmination of all my years of girl scouting.

Virginia will leave Cohasset at the end of this month and head to Wake Forest University in North Carolina. She hopes families and lovers of history alike will set off on the Quest even after she has left Cohasset. Maybe another Girl Scout will use her quest model to create something similar for the harbor.

"One of the nice things is the project will have longevity," says Virginia's mother, Susan Spofford, "it's a great legacy to leave behind."

A kick off event will be held Wednesday, Aug. 15 from 10:30a.m. to 1p.m. The Quest will begin at the South Shore Community Center and end at the Historical Society. Refreshments will be provided to participants. After the special kick off event, the Quest booklets will be available anytime at the Historical Society building, the library and the Community Center.

Fashion Forward

In conjunction with the ongoing "Century of Hats" exhibit at the Historical Society building, two restored wedding dresses are now on display. The two currently on display were sent to Rhode Island for restoration before during last summer's wedding dress exhibit and have only recently returned to Cohasset. "Century of Hats" and the wedding gowns will remain on display through the end of the month. The Historical Society is open to the public weekdays from 10a.m. to 4p.m. The exhibit is free of charge; however, donations are welcome. Call the Cohasset Historical Society at (781) 383-1434 for more information.

Taking water samples at Cohasset swimming areas

CSCR UPDATE

CHLOE KOINES

"This project is unique because we are protecting the health and well-being of Cohasset residents."

— Juliette Karp, Center for Student Coastal Research

Have you ever wondered if Cohasset's ocean water is really safe for swimming? The Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) students, Juliette Karp, Katina Martone, intern Brittany Novak, and Chloe Koines are currently working alongside Tara Tradd, administrator and inspector from the Cohasset Board of Health, to answer that very question.

Once a week, they venture to Cohasset's six swimming areas, Bassing Beach, Cohasset Yacht Club, Little Harbor, Sandy Cove, Sandy Beach, and Black Rock Beach to take water samples, which they test for enterococci, a species of bacteria that serves as the federal standard for water quality at public swimming areas. Runoff from rain is the main cause for elevated enterococci levels. The runoff carries pollutants from roads and other paved surfaces directly to the surface water of beaches and ponds. Other possible causes are animal waste from pets and birds. You can help control the bacteria levels in Cohasset's swimming areas by simply not feeding the birds and cleaning up after your pets.

While taking the samples it is essential to record water and air temperatures, weather, tide, water clarity, and the last rainfall. These may not seem significant, but they can prove important when examining the results. For example, rain can flush waste into the water and cloudy water can indicate contamination. They also note any unusual observations, such as oil on the water surface, or large numbers of fish, as well as any strange beach conditions.

They recently found thousands of dead ants on the shoreline at Sandy Beach and last week noticed a strong sulfur odor at Sandy Cove. They have not yet discovered the cause of these incidents, but are currently looking into them to determine any connection to the water quality.

After gathering the samples, they give half to the Board of Health, which sends them out to G & L Laboratories in Quincy for professional testing and the other half gets taken back to CSCR for testing using a different method. The purpose of this is to determine whether or not their method measures up to that of the Board of Health. CSCR's testing process is very simple. They add an enterococci indicator called Enterolert to each diluted sample and pour the solution into trays, which are sealed and placed in an incubator for 24 hours. They then examine the trays under an ultraviolet lamp, which shows the presence of bacteria. If they detect enterococci in their samples, they then determine if the level is safe. They have detected the most enterococci in samples from Bassing Beach, which experiences limited tidal flushing, while very low levels have been found in the other areas.

The legal enterococci limit for the water is 104 colony forming units per 100 milliliter sample. If this level of bacteria is found in one of their samples, the affected area will be closed for public safety. Their research program has not detected dangerous levels of enterococci this summer, but has in past years. The bacteria can be harmful, particularly at exceptionally high levels, which usually only occurs in hospitals and can affect humans with infections such as bacteremia, intra-abdominal infections, endocarditis, and urinary tract infections. These infections can be treated with antibiotics, but are important to be aware of. So far, their results have mirrored those of G&L Laboratories, which tells them that CSCR's methods are accurate.

Fellow group member Juliette Karp commented, "This project is unique because we are protecting the health and well-being of Cohasset residents."

All five people involved in the water study feel privileged to be providing this service to the town and will continue to bring news of their findings throughout the summer.

Cohasset's Sam Rice sweeps freestyle events at New England Championship

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Sam Rice is a freestyle master.

The Cohasset 10-year old swept all four freestyle events during last weekend's 12-and-under New England swim championships at Springfield College. Going up against mostly older competition, Rice took first in the 50- (33.52 seconds), 100- (1:11.97), 200- (2:32.53) and 400-meter (5:27.59) freestyle events.

As part of a team representing the Weymouth Waves swim club, Rice qualified for New Englands in 10 events total, although competition rules allowed him to compete in a maximum of nine. He also swam the 50- and 100-meter backstrokes, 50-meter breaststroke, 100-meter fly, and 200-meter individual medley.

"As a 10-year old, it's a pretty big accomplishment to get first place in four events," said Weymouth Waves swim coach Chelsea Brace. "He plays baseball and hockey, too, but he's made a pretty big commitment to the (swim) club, and it shows."

As a team, the Waves finished 17th out of 46 squads at the New England championships, a ranking that would have been even higher had a team participated in the relay events. Rice earned 115 of the Waves' 198 points.

Joining Rice in the Waves contingent at Springfield College were fellow Cohasset native Connor Green, Duxbury's Mike Connolly, Katie Eagan and Michaela Morris, Braintree's Matt Gaffney and Needham's Joseph Bonvouloir.

The Waves have been competing in several meets throughout the summer, with swimmers having to meet qualifying times in order to earn a spot at the New England championships.

A win at last

Breaks finally go Outlaws' way in OT win over Southern NE Rage

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

PLYMOUTH - At last, it was the South Shore Outlaws' turn to win a game in the last minute.

After losing two such contests to begin the season, the Outlaws took the undefeated Southern New England Rage into overtime Saturday night at Plymouth High School, and a one-yard touchdown by Luis Gonzalzes (Wareham) gave the Outlaws the 27-21 win.

The extra period didn't come without its share of dramatics, and at one point it looked as though the Outlaws might suffer their third defeat in as many weeks. After the defense forced a three-and-out to begin overtime, the Outlaws took over at their own 33-yard line and marched 66 yards on 13 plays. Gonzalzes and fellow running back Brian Lewis (Plymouth) took turns carrying the load, including four third down conversions to get down to the Rage 1-yard line.

On second-and-goal, however, Gonzalzes was stripped at the goal line, and the Rage recovered. With less than three minutes to go, the visitors would just need to get a couple first downs to run out the clock. They got one, but a Hank Anderson (Duxbury) sack forced a third-and-long for the Rage. Southern NE's long pass attempt was well defended by Outlaws safety Joune Frasier (Kingston), and the Rage's Tyler Grogan (son of Patriots legend Steve) had to punt from his own end zone.

What followed was the play of the game from one of the Outlaws' players of the game, Mike Leoncello (Brockton). Fielding the punt at his own 44-yard line, Leoncello – who returned two interceptions for touchdowns in regulation – started to his left, cut back to his right all the way to the sideline, and somehow managed to escape what looked like a sure tackle there and bolt down the sideline. With several blockers in front of him, Leoncello made it down to the Rage's 1-yard line before he was tackled and, much to the dismay of Outlaws fans who thought for sure this would be it, fumbled.

> "I'll put our offensive line up against anybody's in the league."
> Outlaws head coach Greg Townsend

Fortunately for the home team, Anderson was on hand to recover the fumble. Gonzalzes made no mistake on the next play, following the sure lead block of fullback John Coleman (Wareham) and getting into the end zone. Ball game.

Gonzalzes finished with 150 yards on 23 carries, including a 70-yard run in the first quarter to open the game's scoring. That long run came through a big hole on the left side of the line, opened up by tackle Kris Barry (Wareham) and guard Sean DeLoid (Plymouth). In general, Barry, DeLoid, center Eric Kraft (Kingston), right guard Rory Thomas (East Wareham), right tackle Joe Virden (Brockton) and Jake Santos (Taunton) played a strong game in the trenches for the Outlaws' offense.

Gonzalzes said after the game he was hoping for another opportunity after his fumble.

"I put it on the defense after that, and they came up big and gave me a second chance," he said. "I was determined to get in the end zone the second time."

The running game has been a major strength for the Outlaws so far this season, never more so than Saturday night, sending head coach Greg Townsend home a happy man.

"Luis Gonzalzes, what a great running back that kid us," Townsend said. "And I'll put our offensive line up against anybody's in the league."

Not to be overlooked in this one was the performance of the Outlaws' defense. The Rage came into the game having scored 49 points in its first two contests, behind a powerful option running game and the strong arm of quarterback Dan Ashworth. The Rage did come up with a few big plays – including an Ashworth-to-Grogan 83-yard TD connection in the second quarter – but South Shore came up with the big stops when needed.

Anderson and fellow linebackers Matt Costello (Wareham) and Peter Kane (Plymouth) were solid against the run. Townsend also praised the play up front of defensive ends Nick Tam (Plymouth) and Dave Reed

Solid finish to Little League careers

12-year-olds go out in style

The Little League careers of the Cohasset 12A's came to an end recently when they finished second in the Sandwich All-Star Tournament.

Sixteen teams from Massachusetts entered the Sandwich tournament, which began Thursday, July 26, and finished with the semifinals and finals Wednesday, Aug. 1. Cohasset entered Sunday's final round as the third seed behind Milton and Rehoboth. Due to heavy rains late Sunday afternoon the tournament got postponed until Tuesday and Wednesday night.

After beating Middleboro in the quarterfinals in the "game of the year," Cohasset faced an undefeated team from Rehoboth. Rehoboth sent its 6-foot, 1-inch ace to the mound and Cohasset countered with its ace Connor Goetz. Behind Goetz's gutsy pitching (eight strike outs) Cohasset played tremendous defense and offensively came through with some timely hitting. Shane Haggerty struck first with a two out single up the middle to score Jamie Timothy. Later in the game Connor O'Brien laid down a perfect bunt to plate another run. Goetz took over from there as he stymied the heavy hitting Rehoboth team allowing Cohasset to advance to the finals with a 4-1 victory.

Cohasset faced a familiar foe in the finals – Scituate. Scituate advanced as it came from behind to beat Milton 15-13 in the semifinals. After a brief delay and approximately 48 hot dogs the Cohasset players took the field for their last game in a Little League uniform.

All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team

4 Skippers among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and we do feel secure that we chose the top public school boys lacrosse athletes for this honor.

This is the Community Newspaper Company boys lacrosse squad comprised of athletes from Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Silver Lake, Pembroke, Cohasset, Duxbury, Taunton, Apponequet, Bridgewater-Raynham, Randolph, Avon, Whitman-Hanson, Plymouth North, Plymouth South, West Bridgewater, East Bridgewater, Wareham, Oliver Ames, Holbrook, Carver, Norton and Mansfield.

Mike Bunstein – Senior
Attack – Cohasset

Arguably the best playmaker in the area, Bunstein earned All-American honors with a 31-goal, 69-assist season…Possesses a remarkable instinct for finding teammates in a position to score, and knows how to score goals in his own right…Two of Bunstein's best games may have been five-goal, four-assist performance against Barnstable in regular season finale, and a seven-assist showing in Div. 3 state semifinals against Hanover…Said Cohasset head coach Stew Curran: "In a way, he was our Tom Brady on offense. [Mike] Grimm and [Mark] Flibotte got a lot of notoriety, but with Bunny, the ball went through his stick and good things always happened"…Will continue his lacrosse career at Lasell College

Mark Flibotte – Junior
Attack – Cohasset

Joined teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Mike Bunstein as an All-American, and it was well deserved…Flibotte led the Skippers with 104 points (64 goals, 40 assists)…An instrumental part of Cohasset's comeback win over Scituate in the Div. 3 state final, finishing that game with six goals…Scored a first half hat trick three days earlier in semifinal win over Hanover…Stands a good shot at breaking the program's all-time scoring record next spring…Cohasset head coach Stew Curran on Flibotte: "Mark is a smart, good athlete, and he works hard"…Also plays football and basketball for CHS

Mike Grimm – Junior
Attack – Cohasset

As explosive a player as there is in this area, Grimm joined fellow All-Scholastics Mike Bunstein and Mark Flibotte to form an outstanding attacking trio…Scored six goals in Cohasset's Div. 3 state title win over Scituate…Had four unanswered goals in fourth period to lead a comeback win over Hingham May 15; Grimm finished that game with five scores…Notched a hat trick in Cohasset's 14-11 regular season loss to eventual Div. 1 state champion Duxbury…Grimm can safely be considered a strong candidate for All-American status next spring…Also plays soccer for CHS

Dan Trendowicz – Senior
Midfield – Cohasset

His teammates in attack get a lot more attention, but Trendowicz was the proverbial glue that held things together during the Skippers' two state championship runs…A superb two-way player, Trendowicz finished with 15 goals and 22 assists while playing excellent defense…Scored a pair of goals in quarterfinal win over Bishop Stang…A South Shore League All-Star, one of six on Cohasset's roster…Plans to continue his lacrosse career at Salve Regina in Newport, R.I.

Steve Lydon – Senior (Capt.)
Midfield – Braintree

Strong multi-sport athlete had another Bay State Conference All-Star season on the lacrosse field for Braintree…Amassed over 50 points before season was ended due to an injury, leading the Wamps in scoring…Had two goals and an assist in season-opening win against Framingham…Had a hat trick – as did younger brother Kevin – in April 23 win over Milton…Also had a pair of eight-point games, including one in April 18 victory against Norwell…Also an All-Scholastic performer in hockey and a soccer player for BHS, Lydon will play lacrosse at Providence College

Craig Sullivan – Junior
Defense – Duxbury

No question here…Sullivan was arguably the best defenseman on the South Shore this season with his aggressive play on the Dragons' squad…The junior was named a US Lacrosse All-American after helping to guide Duxbury to its fourth-straight Division 1 State championship…His long runs from the back often startled opposing defense and allowed him to contribute to the offense…Netted seven goals and one assist this spring…Was a stalwart in the state title game at Xaverian, making crucial stops and loose ball pickups in the 10-9 overtime victory…Was a standout in the state semifinal game against Billerica, keeping the offense quiet in two overtime periods in a 12-11 victory…Just a junior, this Patriot League and Eastern Mass. All-Star will return to anchor the DHS defense next spring.

Scott Austin – Junior
Attack – Duxbury

Playing behind a loaded attack crew last season, Austin finally got his chance to shine this spring as a primetime player…The junior was the leading scorer on the Duxbury team this season, racking up 81 points on 48 goals, 33 assists for the four-time Division 1 State champions…Was a big-game player all season long, netting four goals in a 9-5 win over Beverly in the Division 1 quarterfinals…During the regular season, Austin's performance was key to a pair of wins over the Division 3 State finalists Cohasset (three goals) and Scituate (two goals, four assists)…The Patriot League All-Star also plays football at DHS and will return to both squads next year…Austin would ultimately like to continue his lacrosse career at a Division 1 college upon graduation.

Bobby Barry –
Senior (Captain)
Midfield – Duxbury

A standout midfielder, Barry saved some of his best performances for last, netting two goals in the Division 1 State championship game, including the second one that clinched a 10-9 OT win over Xaverian…It was the Dragons' fourth-straight state title…Tallied 23 points this season on 14 goals, nine assists with his great speed in the midfield…Also scored a crucial goal in Duxbury's semifinal win over Billerica, to give the Dragons a 10-9 lead that would eventually result in a 12-11 double-OT victory…A standout defenseman on the DHS hockey squad, Barry helped guide the Dragons to a Division 1 State championship this past winter…The grad plans to continue his lacrosse career at Wheaton this year.

Ben Cederberg –
Senior (Captain)
Attack – Duxbury

Another solid attackman for the Dragons, Cederberg's undeniable presence up front made him one of the catalysts on the Duxbury offense…The senior captain racked up 54 points this season on 44 goals, 10 assists, helping to guide the Dragons to their fourth-straight Division 1 State championship…Was a standout in Duxbury's postseason run, netting five goals in a double-OT 12-11 victory over Billerica before adding another three goals in a 10-9 win over rival Xaverian in the state title game…Cederberg's best regular season game came in a 18-3 lashing of Norwell, scoring six goals and an assist in the victory…A solid two-sport athlete at DHS, Cederberg was also an All-Star goalie for the Dragons soccer team last fall…He plans to continue his lacrosse career next year at Wheaton, alongside teammate Bobby Barry.

Bill Jackson –
Senior (Captain)
Attack – Hanover

Still a young program, Jackson was a major factor in putting it on the map over the last two seasons…The Patriot League All-Star finished the spring as Hanover's all-time leading scorer with 242 career points on 113 goals, 129 assists…Was the catalyst on the attack this past spring, leading the Indians with 107 points on 42 goals, 65 assists…Guided the Indians (14-7) in big wins all season long, scoring four goals and three assists in a 13-3 quarterfinal win over Bourne in the Division 3 Eastern Mass. tourney and racking up three goals one assist in a regular season win over Arlington…A three sport athlete at HHS, Jackson also captained the golf team last fall and was a key player and captain on the hockey team, which won a Division 3 State title this past winter…Jackson plans to attend the University of Rhode Island this fall.

Max Vaickus – Junior
Goalie – Hingham

A standout goalie for the Harbormen this season, Vaickus finished his junior season as a US Lacrosse All-American after posting a solid 6.9 goals against average…Boasts tremendous skill between the pipes and consistently kept Hingham in close games with his gutsy play…His double-digit save totals came up huge in tight victories over Patriot League rivals Hanover (8-5) and non-league power St. John's Prep (10-9 in OT)…Was one of the stars of the game in a battle with Division 1 State champs Duxbury, holding the four-time title winners to a 6-2 decision, one of their lowest goal totals of the season…His solid play in the goal helped Hingham to a 9-9 record and berth in the Division 2 Eastern Mass. Tourney, where the Harbormen reached the quarterfinals…Also runs cross country at HHS and will return to both teams next season.

Austin Driscoll – Junior
Midfield – Hingham

A standout player on the attack, Driscoll was among the top scorers on the Harbormen team (9-9) this spring…Driscoll boasts blistering speed, solid stick skills, and top-notch ball control…Gave opposing offenses fits with his ability to maneuver and change seamlessly directions…Scored goals in some key wins over St. John's Prep (10-9, OT), Winchester (7-4), Needham (9-8), and Weymouth (12-6), in the first annual Orange Hat Classic…His consistency on offense helped Hingham qualify for play in the Div. 2 Eastern Mass. tourney, where the Harbormen reached the quarterfinals…Just a junior, Driscoll will be among the top returning players to the Hingham squad next season.

Connor Hayes – Senior (Captain)
Attack – Mansfield

In his four years at Mansfield, Hayes established himself as one of the prominent scorers in the state with an uncanny ability to almost single-handedly bring the Hornets back into contention...Hayes finished his senior campaign with 90 goals and 50 assists on a special season for Mansfield...Hayes was named Hockomock League MVP, three-time league all-star and culminated his career by being named an All-American...In the fall, he will attend Bryant after accumulating 208 goals and 120 assists in his career.

Matt Kiley – Senior (Captain)
Attack – Mansfield

If captain Connor Hayes was the Hornets' Batman, then Kiley was more than a capable Robin and the number two scorer on the team...Kiley finished second on the team in scoring with 71 goals and 56 assists for the 17-plus win Hornets...Kiley and Hayes swapped leading the league in scoring for the past three and formed the highest scoring duo in the state...The senior was a three-time Hockomock League All-Star.

Mike Morrill – Junior
Attack/Forward – Mansfield

The passing of the torch from the senior class to the underclassmen, came when Morrill defeated Catholic Memorial in the first round of the state tournament by ripping a game-winner in overtime...After that game head coach Craig Juelis said, "losing the seniors would be a big hit to the team," but Morrill's return will ease that transition...Morrill achieved his second straight all-star season for the Hornets while playing the background as the seniors garnered the headlines...Next season he will serve as team captain with hopes of establishing himself as the next big thing at Mansfield...He topped the 30 goal 30 assists mark this season.

Chris Walker – Junior
Attack – Marshfield

After missing all of last season due to an injury, Walker returned to form to lead the Marshfield laxers in scoring with 98 points on 64 goals, 34 assists…This despite sitting out for much of the second half in blowout games…An Atlantic Coast League and Eastern Mass. All-Star, Walker tallied a hat trick in a crucial win over Sandwich, earning the Atlantic Coast League crown for the Rams (13-1)…Won the MHS Offensive Player of the Year Award this season for his efforts in guiding Marshfield (15-4) to the Division 1 Eastern Mass. Tourney…Tied MHS alum Sean Morris' record for most goals scored in a single game with 12…Walker plays for the South Shore Jr. Minutemen U-19 team year round…With one more season left to play at MHS, Walker will return to captain the team next spring and plans on continuing his lacrosse career at a Division 1 college upon graduation.

Wendell Chipman – Senior (Captain)
Defenseman – Marshfield

Was a big reason why Marshfield boasted the best goals against average on the South Shore with 5.0…An Atlantic Coast League and Eastern Mass. All-Star, Chipman also received the league's Sportsman of the Year award for his efforts in guiding the Rams to the ACL title (13-1)…His speed and strength in the defensive end of the field helped Marshfield (15-4) edge strong teams from Hingham (5-4), Falmouth (6-4), and Sandwich (10-8)…A talented three sport athlete at MHS, Chipman also helped guide the Rams football team to a Division 1A Super Bowl appearance and was also a standout wrestler on the Division 1 South finalist squad this past winter…Chipman plans to continue his football career at UMass-Amherst in the fall.

Matt Bak – Junior
Goalie – Marshfield

His coach called him an "absolute rock in net all year" and for good reason…The junior goalie posted the South Shore's best goals against average at 4.8 per game…Recorded one shutout for the Rams this season, an amazing feat in lacrosse and was a stalwart in a pair of crucial games against Atlantic Coast League foe Sandwich…Racked up double-digit saves in two contests against the Blue Knights, the second of which was a 10-8 win that clinched the ACL crown for the Rams…The ACL and Eastern Mass. All-Star is also the goalie on the South Shore Jr. Minutemen Lacrosse U-19 team, Bak will return to the MHS squad next season as a captain…Future plans include continuing his lacrosse career in post-grad and/or college.

Kenton Magown – Senior (Capt.)
Defense – Norwell

Leader of a talented defense that helped guide Norwell back to the state tournament for the first time since 2004…Magown was a three-year starter at NHS and earned a nod to the South Shore League All-Star team this spring…Showed a knack for defending on one end and then starting an attack at the other by carrying the ball downfield…Said Clippers head coach Tom Flanagan during the season: "Kenton is a great athlete who gets it. His intensity on the field is second to none. As a player he has given me his all on the field. I will miss him"…Magown also played football at NHS

Josh Siegel – Senior (Captain)
Defense – Oliver Ames

All Siegel did in his final seasons, was take a young Tigers team that struggled to find success a year ago and turn them into a six-win squad with a promising future…He was a tenacious defender with the ability to frustrate the leagues top scorers and was a field general despite playing defense...Siegel was a member of the National Honor Society and a Hockomock Scholar Athlete Award winner...Siegel should complete his pilots' test this summer before heading to Boston University in the fall.

Dan Gaudet – Senior (Captain)
Attack – Plymouth

Gaudet will be the largest piece of the puzzle that the combined Plymouth North/Plymouth South team will have to replace next spring…The Atlantic Coast League All-Star captained the team and led Plymouth in scoring in each of the last three seasons…In his four years with Plymouth, the attackman/midfielder helped the team go from club status to a pair of tourney appearances over the last two seasons…Gaudet was one of the top point-producers in the state his senior year, tallying 108 points.

Pat Reilly– Junior Forward – Plymouth

Reilly teamed with fellow CNC All-Scholastic Dan Gaudet to lead the combined Plymouth North/Plymouth South lacrosse team on a run at the Atlantic Coast League title this season…Marshfield would eventually come away with the crown but Reilly helped Plymouth to a 13-5 record and a second consecutive playoff appearance…The Atlantic Coast League All-Star was a force on the attack line with 48 goals to go along with five assists for the year.

Gary Crowley – Senior (Capt.)
Midfield – Scituate

There were accolades aplenty for the Sailors' midfielder this season: All-American, Patriot League All-Star and Eastern Mass. All-Star among them…Came up big when his team needed it most, evidenced best by his five-goal output in the Div. 3 state semifinal against Dover-Sherborn…Finished with 80 points (55 goals, 25 assists) for the season…Sailors head coach Rick Bagby said during the season Crowley was the best player he had seen all year, and Cohasset head coach Stew Curran called him "the best offensive player in the state" after the Skippers' Div. 3 state title win over Scituate…Also a football All-Scholastic, Crowley will continue his lacrosse career at Bryant University

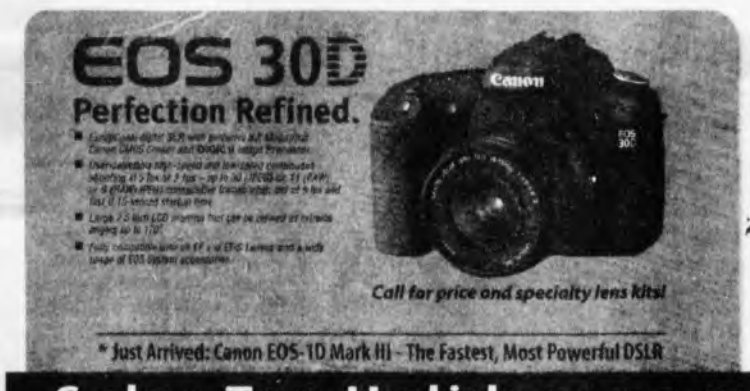
Jake Gray – Junior
Goalie – Scituate

Emerged as one of the area's best goalies to help lead Scituate to the Div. 3 state championship game…Gray was recognized for his efforts by being named to the Patriot League All-Star team…Had 10 saves in Div. 3 state semifinal win over Dover-Sherborn, helping to limit the Raiders to two goals in the entire second half…Turned in one of his best games in May 3 11-010 loss to Cohasset, making 14 stops against the Skippers' vaunted attack…Gray and fellow junior All-Scholastic Ryan Woodford will anchor what should be a very strong Scituate defense next season

Ryan Woodford – Junior
Defense – Scituate

Led a strong group of junior defensemen that only got better as the season wore on…Woodford made his presence known in all phases of the game, checking and creating turnovers defensively and starting attacks on offense…Also immense in controlling ground balls…One of Scituate's three Patriot League All-Stars this season, joining fellow All-Scholastics Gary Crowley and Jake Gray…Woodford also plays defenseman for the SHS hockey team, where he was a solid contributor to last winter's Div. 3 state championship winning team

Connor Keefe – Senior
Midfield – Weymouth



Keefe was one of the toughest players you will find, either on the lacrosse field in the spring, or on the ice with the Cinderella Weymouth hockey team… After a winter of preventing goals, this spring he went on the offensive to the tune of 38 goals and 22 assists while leading the Wildcats back to the tournament for the first time without beloved head coach Tony Manzelli manning the sidelines…Keefe was a Bay State League All-Star and an EMass All-Star this season…An All-Scholastic in hockey as well, he will be sorely missed by both squads next season, where he plans on attending Bridgton Academy and will play lacrosse.

(Plymouth), and defensive tackle Steve Medieros (Wareham).

And then there were the heroics of Leoncello. On the third play of the second quarter, Ashworth made a pass under the duress and Leoncello was in position to pick it off, and proceeded to take it 60 yards to the house. The second of John Carpenter's (Plymouth) three successful extra points made it 14-0.

With the score tied at 14 just before the end of the third quarter, Leoncello did it again, making a one-handed grab in between two Rage receivers and going 43 yards for the score.

An 11-yard pass from Ashworth to Grogan with only a couple minutes remaining in the fourth tied it up, setting the stage for overtime.

The Outlaws (1-2) will travel to Lynn this Saturday for a 2 p.m. contest against the North Shore Generals. For information, log on to the Outlaws' Web site, www.ssoutlawsfootball.com.

Solid finish to Little League careers

FROM LEAGUE, PAGE 15

In the second inning Scituate struck first and put five runs on the board. Scituate added two more runs in the top of the third inning before Cohasset got on the board. Jamie Timothy led off the bottom of the third inning with a home run to cut the deficit to 7-1. Cohasset scored two more later in the game to close the gap to 7-3.

Cohasset had the bases loaded with its hottest hitter of the tournament, Craig Davis, at the plate. Davis lined a laser toward left field but Scituate's Jack White stabbed the liner at third base for the last out. Scituate did not let up the rest of the game, hitting four home runs on its way to a 15-5 championship victory.

This group of 12-year-olds has proudly accomplished the following in their Little League careers: 9-year-old District 8 Championship, 11-year-old District 8 Championship, 12-year-old Williamsport District 8 finalist and Sandwich All-Star Tournament finalist. Along the way to these accomplishments the players have become great friends and very supportive teammates, all the while having fun playing the sport of baseball and representing the town of Cohasset proudly.

Charity Bike Ride

The Dick Melloni Youth Foundation (DMYF) kicks off the fall season with its annual Foundation Fifty-Five Charity Bicycle Ride to be held Sunday, Sept. 16.

A full 100 percent of the proceeds from this fundraising event will directly support established DMYF programs for youths

The ride begins at the quaint Onset Harbor Pier in Onset and proceeds through 55-miles of Upper Cape Cod's most beautiful cycling beginning with the Cape Cod Canal. After enjoying the view of Cape Cod Bay from Scussett Beach, riders will proceed toward breathtaking vistas of the Plymouth Harbor and waterfront. Then, on to the Myles Standish State Park for a spectacular roll through the unspoiled State Forest, and back to Onset for post-ride check-in and festivities that include therapeutic massage, prizes, and a grand all-you-can eat pizza party. Ample parking, clearly marked routes, maps, sag wagons, mobile tech support and first aid are provided. Rest stops have food, water and rest rooms.

Registration is $40 plus $250 in minimum fundraising contributions. All participants registered prior to Aug. 1 that meet the minimum fundraising requirements receive a professional quality cycling jersey with cool sublimated graphics unique to this year's event and a tote bag filled with useful and fun bicycling items. Late registrations are accepted, however, at that time jerseys are available on a first-come, first-served basis.

A full 100 percent of the proceeds from this fundraising event will directly support established DMYF programs for youths, including the "Lids-4-Kids" bicycling helmet safety program, the DMYF Child Literacy Program, and our "CARBS" (Children Always Ride Buckled Safely) Program to promote child car seat safety to name a few. This is a sanctioned 501-3C charity, and as such all donations are fully tax-deductible.

For a registration form or information regarding sponsorship or volunteer opportunities, call Rich or Kim Melloni at 508-295-5035 or e-mail melloni@comcast.net, or visit www.dmyf.org. Riders can register online at www.BikeReg.com or www.Active.com.

skirt! magazine

Coming to Boston on October 1st...

skirt! magazine is all about women...

If you're looking for a growing opportunity and are interested in getting in on the ground floor of a hip, new women's magazine in the Boston market, we would like to speak with you. We are currently looking to fill the following positions:

skirt!®

is all about women... their work, play, families, creativity, style, health and wealth, bodies and souls. skirt! is an attitude... spirited, independent, outspoken, serious, playful and irreverent, sometimes controversial, always passionate.

Advertising Sales Manager

Inspire and lead the sales efforts of the department. Work collaboratively with the Director of Speciality Publications to attain sales goals for the publication. Accompany sales reps on calls, meet with reps to develop sales strategies and work with other team members to develop sales materials and other departmental needs.

Requirements: At least 3 years as a lead sales rep at a print publication, management experience preferred. Retail background also helpful. College degree required.

Account Executive

Develop leads, follow-up on assigned projects, presenting the publication and securing business for the magazine each month. Responsible for maintaining a list of several hundred active accounts and prospects. Will be expected to handle a large volume of business, exceeding 50 active accounts per month, and billings of $20,000 and above.

Requirements: At least 1-3 years experience as a sales rep at a print publication. Retail background helpful. Professional demeanor, college degree and computer skills required.

Graphic Designer

Responsible for all DTP functions associated with the magazine, including but not limited to: ad design and construction, editorial pages and content preparation.

Requirements: At least 2 years at a local or regional magazine, good graphic sense, complete familiarity with Quark, Illustrator, InDesign, Photoshop and other software associated with design and production of a magazine. Freehand illustration ability a plus. College degree or design school certificate preferred.

Retail Marketing and Promotions (Independent Contractor)

Visit targeted retail businesses and secure approval to deliver and display our skirt! magazine. This is not a sales position and deliveries will be handled monthly by our distribution operation. This person will professionally represent the product to retail locations. A reliable, insured vehicle is required.

Please send resume and cover letter to:

Annual Panagia Golf Classic is Aug. 27

More than one hundred golfers are expected to compete for up to $50,000 in prizes at the 2007 Panagia Golf Classic scheduled for Monday, Aug. 27, with an 8:30 a.m. shotgun start, at Widow's Walk Golf Course in Scituate, followed by a luncheon at the historic Barker Tavern. The seventh annual event will benefit the historic Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church and the South Shore's Habitat for Humanity.

The church was built in 1895-1900 by the Pope family, in memory of their son Alexander and designed by the same architect of Boston's Trinity Church in Copley Square.

In 1980 the church became the place of worship for a parish, which presently includes more than two hundred Greek Orthodox Christian families under the guidance of Rev. Fr. John G. Maheras of Scituate. The tournament's name, Panagia, is Greek for most holy one, which refers to the Virgin Mary

In a Florida scramble, golfers will shoot in five hole-in-one contests on all of Widow's Walk's par three holes. Hole-in-one prizes will include, among other significant prizes, a 2007 Toyota Camry, compliments of Toyota of Weymouth. The closest to the pin winner will receive a 2007 Taylor Made putter, while the winner of the long drive competition will win a 2007 Taylor Made Burner Driver.

The tournament is expected to sell out. In past years, players have traveled from as far away a Texas to play in this event.

Tournament fees can be paid up to the day of the tournament. The cost is $135 per golfer and $500 per foursome, including lunch. To register for the event, or for information on sponsorship opportunities, call 617-827-3744.

Music at the Gazebo concert series planned

Sponsored by the Pyne Keohane Funeral Home of Hingham, Music at the Gazebo concerts will take place this year from 3 to 4:30 p.m., on Sept. 9, 16 and 23. These three free Sunday afternoon concerts will entertain the community with Big Band favorites for the 11th summer in a row.

The opening concert on Sunday, Sept. 9, will feature the return of local favorite, Gregg Savage Quintet, who is sure to keep the audience toe tapping to tunes from the Big Band era, swing and Dixieland.

On the second Sunday, Bobbi Carrey and Doug Hammer revisit the Gazebo to impress locals with their new show "Mostly Mercer." Carrey has also had a stellar career performing to critical acclaim in the Boston and Cambridge markets. Free Music at the Gazebo T-shirts will be given to the first 150 concertgoers on this day.

The third and final Sunday at the Gazebo will feature a band new to the concert series, Tom Nutile Band. They will be playing a variety of musical genres from swing to modern jazz. Having first started with Tom's father Roy, Tom Nutile Band has been on the Boston scene for years, and in more recent times played at the opening of Zakim Bridge and Harvest Ball at the Prudential Center. The band will be bringing five of its 14 members to Hull where they hope to become an audience favorite.

"We are extremely grateful that the Hull Memorial Commission and the Veterans Memorial Park allow us to hold these concerts," said Dennis Keohane of Pyne Keohane Funeral Home. "Big Band era music has been particularly influential to American culture and is respected by people of many different ages. These American classics will make for a fun and delightful time for the entire family". Pyne Keohane Funeral Home donated the Gazebo to Veterans Memorial Park in 1996.

The park is at the intersection of Nantasket and Samoset avenues, across from Lucky Star Restaurant. Free parking is available at Hull Redevelopment Authority in the adjacent lot. Concertgoers should bring their own seating. Performances will be canceled in case of rain.

Theater review

'Miss Saigon' heats up stage

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

During these dog days of summer, the last thing you probably want to hear is that the heat is on. But you'll feel differently if you're lucky enough to be in the audience for the current Company Theatre production of "Miss Saigon" where the reference to rising temperatures comes by way of a song lyric. Thanks to a magnificently staged, impressively acted and beautifully sung production of the Claude-Michel Schonberg and Alan Boubil musical with lyrics by Boubil and Richard Maltby Jr., which ran on Broadway from 1991 to 2001, the heat is definitely on in Norwell.

Based on Puccini's opera "Madame Butterfly," the story centers on Kim, a young Vietnamese woman forced to work as a prostitute who falls in love with Chris, an American soldier stationed in Saigon during the Vietnam War. After the war, Chris returns home and ends up marrying while Kim remains in Saigon with Tam, the son Chris never knew they had. After the war, an army buddy of Chris's is aiding relief efforts in Thailand when he spots Kim and Tam and lets Chris know of their whereabouts. Chris, with his American wife in tow, heads to Bangkok for what ends up being an all-too-brief reunion with Kim.

Boubil and Schonberg are the creative team behind "Les Miserables" – as well as the costliest bomb of this past Broadway season, "The Pirate Queen" – and "Miss Saigon" came along at a time when mainstream audiences were eating up special effects while critics were railing against the trend toward spectacle over substance. With its spectacular staging of the act two evacuation scene, "Miss Saigon" quickly became known as the "helicopter musical." The show is much more than that, however, and the love story set to a backdrop of war and hardship is just as riveting as the on-stage arrival of the chopper.

The ensemble dances in the palace in a blur of colorful streamers and moving bodies.

Chris (Michael Warner) falls in love with Kim and tries to find a way to get her away from the street life.

The scene inside the Pussycat Club a bawdy entertainment center that was a hub of life in a war-torn country.

The Company Theatre creative team of director and set designer Zoe Bradford, director Jordie Saucerman, and choreographer Sally Ashton Forrest have wisely not overlooked the importance of this show's signature set pieces. They're using part of an actual Vietnam war-era "Huey" on-stage as well as what appears to be all of a vintage car. Interestingly, the special effects, while impressively executed for a local theater, are not the best parts of this first-rate production. That distinction belongs to the uniformly excellent cast.

As Chris, Holbrook's Michael Warner – a Company Theatre favorite for his work as George Bailey in "It's A Wonderful Life" – proves he is well worth casting even when the role doesn't call for a Jimmy Stewart type. Warner is just right as the earnest young man trying to do right by his American wife and the family he left behind in Vietnam. Warner's voice soars to the rafters in the powerful act one ballad "Why God, Why." Warner is well-matched by both his leading ladies. A veteran of the mid-1990s national tour of "Fiddler on the Roof," starring Theodore Bikel, in which she played the roles of Bielke and Grandma Tzeitel, Jennifer Schafer is clearly a versatile and very talented performer, as she shows here with her nuanced portrayal of the timid, yet determined Kim. Schafer is wonderful in "The Movie in My Mind." "Last Night of the World" and the gorgeous "Sun and Moon," which she does as a duet with Warner in the first act and solo on an act two reprise. As Chris's wife, Ellen, Kendra Kachadoorian seems just good enough for the acting her role requires. However, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus member will have you sitting up and offering her your full attention on the act one duet with Schafer, "I Still Believe," and later, when Ellen meets Kim in person and then returns to her hotel filled with uncertainty, Kachadoorian lets loose a vocal power on "Now That I've Seen Her" that lets you know immediately why she got this part. Kendra Kachadoorian, complete with a great alliterative name, can sing like nobody's business.

While the tortured love triangle provides the show's romantic tension, the show is about a war and the seediness that was Saigon in the early 1970s. As The Engineer, Company Theatre fixture John King tackles a new kind of character in a career that has seen the Weymouth actor play more than his share of standard-issue young male leads. King seems to be delighting in his turn as the Asian pimp whose Saigon brothel provides the backdrop for Chris and Kim's first meeting. King's Engineer may be a sleazy opportunist from whom most people would run, but in King's hands you won't want to look away. His act two show-stopper "The American Dream," in which he somewhat salaciously comes on to the hood of a classic car, is itself a classic.

Musical director Michael V. Joseph leads a note-perfect pit band. Shirley Carney's costumes – which range from regulation-issue military fatigues for the soldiers to glittery halters for the dance hall-girl hookers – are terrific and all are shown off well by Matt Guzinski's spot-on lighting. Technical director Bob Grazioso also deserves mention for his fine work on this tech-heavy production.

"Miss Saigon" will be presented at The Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Dr, Norwell, through Aug. 19. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at companytheatre.com.

Attend without 'Reservations'

No Reservations (A-)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

You can smell the saffron-infused chemistry in the foodie romance "No Reservations." Here is another summer sleeper hit to stand beside "Waitress" and "Once." Directed by Scott Hicks ("Snow Falling on Cedars"), the film was scripted by Carol Fuchs from an original screenplay by German filmmaker Sandra Nettelbeck. It is a remake of Nettelbeck's 2001 art house winner "Mostly Martha," a German-language film about a lovelorn, workaholic, loner chef (Martina Gedeck) who finds motherhood, love and companionship thrust upon her.

Most importantly, "No Reservations" costars the gloriously matched actors Catherine Zeta-Jones ("Ocean's Twelve," "The Legend of Zorro") and Aaron Eckhart ("Thank You for Smoking").

Zeta-Jones is Kate Armstrong, the temperamental star chef at Manhattan's 22 Bleeker Restaurant, where she butts heads with the bossy owner Paula (Patricia Clarkson), tosses raw meat at pesky patrons and strictly disciplines her crack staff.

It's "Ratatouille" for real every night at 22 Bleeker. Kate, who hasn't had a relationship in a few years, is perhaps closest to her shrink (Bob Balaban), whom she has been ordered to see by Paula and whom she feeds with food as well as thought.

Kate (Catherine Zeta-Jones) tries a new concoction by her co-chef Nick (Aaron Eckhart).

Into the tightly-wrapped, truffle-sniffing, fish-sticks-hating life of Kate comes her shattered niece Zoe ("Little Miss Sunshine" herself, Abigail Breslin), whose mother has been killed in an accident, and Nick Palmer (Eckhart), a bohemian, rising chef who wears Crocs and funny pants to work. Nick also loves opera and singing along with Pavarotti and Boccelli.

"No Reservations" is going to sweep audiences off their feet. Since making a splash on this side of the world with "Shine" (1996), Australian filmmaker Hicks stumbled badly with "Hearts in Atlantis" (2001). But he's back on track with "No Reservations." The restaurant ambience in the film is so convincing you can almost smell the roasting quail, and Zeta-Jones makes Kate lovely and charming both inside her shell and out of it, if bringing perhaps too much sex appeal to the role.

Eckhart has the face-splitting smile of a gleeful Muppet, making him the perfect father figure for stuffed-animal lover Zoe, and he combines that clownish appeal with rugged handsomeness and an appealing down-to-earth manner. As Kate's unrequitedly adoring, single-dad neighbor, Irish actor Brian F. O'Byrne makes more out of a small role than seems possible.

Breslin's round and flawless face is a mirror of Zoe's thoughts and grief. Some of the twists might seem phony, but, in addition to a jaunty, opera-filled score, "No Reservations" has that sine qua non of romance: high-voltage electricity between the leads. Accept no substitute.

Rated PG. "No Reservations" contains mild foul language.

No plain 'Jane'

"Becoming Jane" (B+)

James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

Jane Austen (Anne Hathaway) tries to come up with just the right phrasing for an early novel.

After Gwyneth Paltrow in "Emma," Renee Zellweger in "Bridget Jones" and "Miss Potter," and now Anne Hathaway as Jane Austen in the mostly Brit-cast "Becoming Jane," is it any wonder the British are feeling a bit invaded?

Jane Austen, whose work has been a treasure trove for readers, filmmakers and filmgoers alike, is, for a change, the Austen-esque heroine of this appealing biographical film.

Hathaway ("The Princess Dairies," "The Devil Wears Prada") recalls a Reynolds or Gainsborough portrait in the midst of a Constable landscape in the film's title role and following in the demur if determined footsteps of her forebears boldly carries this film on lovely American shoulders.

Directed by Julian Jarrold ("Kinky Boots") from a screenplay by Brit TV scribes Kevin Hood and Sarah Williams in a workman-like "Masterpiece Theater"-like style, the film takes the plot structures of Austen's novels, notably "Pride and Prejudice," and patches together a life story.

"That girl needs a husband," observes Jane's awful mother (Julie Walters), summing up the plot of virtually every Austen book, as her brilliant daughter happily scribbles away working at her latest novel. Jane's beloved father Rev. Austen (American James Cromwell), who can scarcely afford to feed his family, gives a wife-pleasing sermon in which he enumerates a woman's roles in the eyes of God: "daughter, sister, wife, mother."

But headstrong Jane will not marry for money, even against the wishes of the tyrannical Lady Gresham (Maggie Smith in high dudgeon) whose unexciting, but sweet nephew (Laurence Fox) is for reasons lost on the dragon lady completely smitten by Jane.

Into the humdrum country life of Jane Austen's Hampshire steps Tom Lefroy (a winning James McAvoy), an Irish rake and scapegrace sent into exile by his uncle. After hearing Jane read, Lefroy loftily recommends she give "Tom Jones" a perusal.

What follows is a ball featuring plenty of hopping and circling. Will Jane find her Darcy in Lefroy or be left to rot in genteel spinsterhood, supporting herself with her "pen."

As Judge Langlois, the disapproving uncle of Lefroy, the late Ian Richardson scowls, wearing what appears to be a dead blue poodle on top of his head (it's a wig) and accusing his nephew of behaving "like a Hotentot." Hathaway may not be the most graceful swan in the lake (she actually galumphs), and she may lack Emma Thompson's dazzling brilliance. But as the Brits would say, she's got a stunning "figger" and coolly radiates beauty and intelligence. Her Jane is really quite becoming.

Rated PG. "Becoming Jane" has a bare-knuckle fight and scenes of mild debauchery.

Volunteers

VOLUNTEERS ARE NEEDED FOR THE 15TH ANNUAL ALZHEIMER'S ASSOCIATION SOUTH SHORE MEMORY WALK on Sunday, Sept. 23. Help set up for the day, assist with the children's area, distribute food, cheer on walkers and help along the walk route. The walk, at Plymouth Plantation in Plymouth, benefits programs of the Alzheimer's Association, providing care and support for individuals and families touched by the disease. Volunteer and make a difference. For more information, call John Scott at 508-747-2868 x298 or e-mail jscott@radiusmanagement.com or visit memorywalkma.org.

VNA CARE NETWORK & HOSPICE, a nonprofit visiting nurse association, needs volunteers to provide practical and emotional support to terminally ill patients and their families. Training, supervision and support are provided. For information, call Nancy Barcelo, volunteer coordinator, at 888-663-3688, ext. 4271. Information about becoming a hospice volunteer is also available at vnacarenetwork.org.

PLYMOUTH INDEPENDENT FILM FESTIVAL is seeking volunteers for the first PIFF event of the year, a Halloween Movie Masquerade Benefit, which will take place at Plimoth Plantation Oct. 28, from 6 p.m. to midnight. Volunteers are needed to take tickets, provide information, work in the screening rooms, help judge the costume contest and more. Young children who come to the 6 p.m. reception with their parents to enjoy the music and show off their costumes will need teenage volunteers with good babysitting skills. Other benefits are planned throughout the year. For information, call Leslie at 508-746-9001 or Arie at 508-958-3338 or email Arie at arie@plyfilmfest.org.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY is in need of Road to Recovery volunteers in the South Shore to drive local cancer patients to and from chemotherapy and/or radiation treatments. An integral part of treating cancer successfully is making sure cancer patients receive treatments, but many find making transportation arrangements a challenge. New volunteers are necessary in order to fulfill the requests for rides from local cancer patients. The schedule for volunteers is flexible and treatment appointments take place weekdays during business hours. For more information about becoming a Road to Recovery volunteer, call the American Cancer Society at 800-ACS-2345.

FESTIVAL OF TREES is seeking volunteers to assist in the planning and organization of the 17th annual Festival of Trees, which will take place Dec. 1 through 3, at Plimoth Plantation in Plymouth. This event benefits Cranberry Hospice, and features more than 50 decorated Christmas trees, daily entertainment and visits from Santa, a cocktail reception and a gift shop. For more information on how to get involved, call the information line at 781-834-7281.

The Beach Boys

Blasts from the past

With The Beach Boys booked for Friday night, and Linda Ronstadt set Saturday, the South Shore Music Circus will be the place to be this week to hear some of the best-known, best-loved songs of the 1960s and 1970s.

Original Beach Boy Mike Love and longtime member Bruce Johnston will be joined under the tent in Cohasset by their bandmates as well as John Stamos on drums. Stamos — who first came to fame on the soap opera "General Hospital" and has since hit it big in primetime on the sitcom "Full House" and the long-running medical drama "ER" — has long been an honorary Beach Boy, joining the band on the road whenever his schedule allows.

John Stamos

Look for the familiar Californinia sounds "Surfin' USA," "Help Me Rhonda," and "Fun, Fun, Fun" to be on the songlist when The Beach Boys — and special guest Stamos — take to the stage on Friday.

Hit songs — and plenty of them — will be heard on Saturday, too, when Ronstadt brings her "Greatest Hits" tour to the South Shore.

Ronstadt — who got her start in the music business with The Stone Poneys over 40 years ago while she was a student at Arizona State University - is considered by fans and critics alike to have one of the greatest female voices of the rock 'n' roll era.

Linda Ronstadt

With a songs like "You're No Good," "When Will I Be Loved," "Ooh Baby Baby" and "Blue Bayou," and covers like "What's New" from her more recent Nelson Riddle period, Ronstadt continues to fill concert halls with the powerful, still beautiful voice that made her a superstar.

The Beach Boys will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on Aug. 10, with Linda Ronstadt following them on Aug. 11. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org.

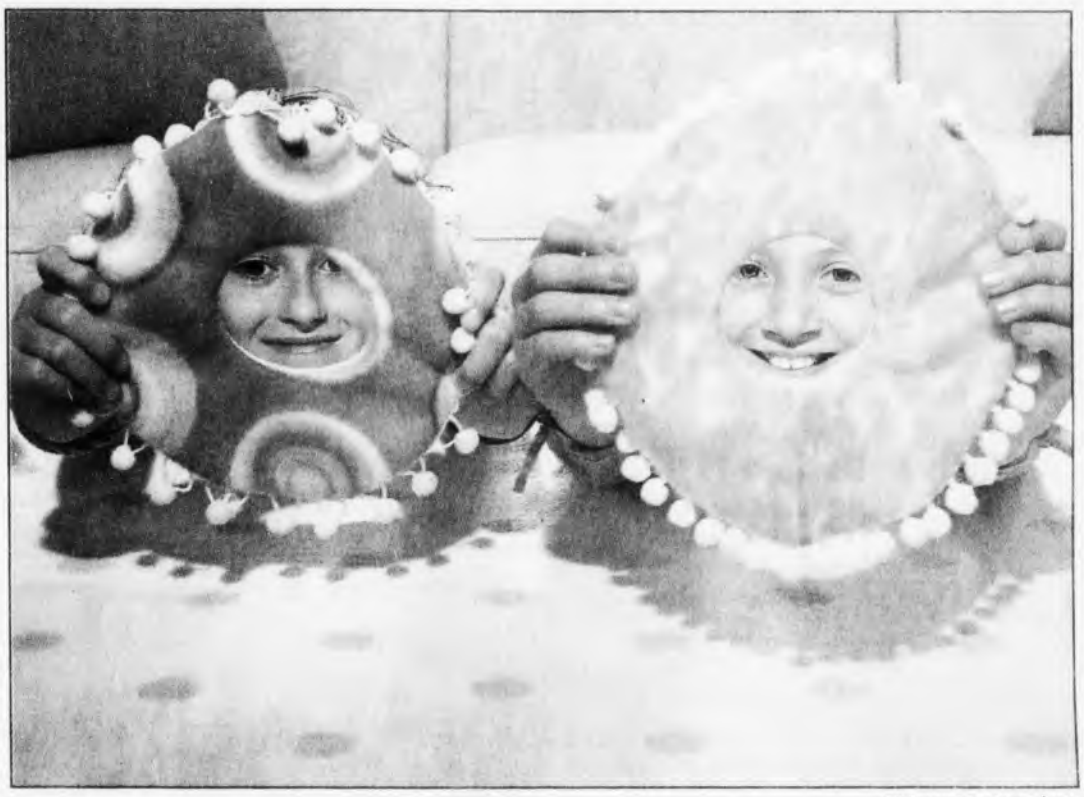
Fourth-graders dress up stuffed animals

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

One of the keys to small business success is having a passion for the business—no matter what it is. Right now, Karlee Koswick and Grace McMeekin are passionate about Webkinz, so the enterprising nine-year-olds have set out to design, construct, market and sell clothing accessories for their favorite stuffed animals.



Karlee and Grace, both of Cohasset, are entering the fourth grade at Derby Academy. Over the winter, the pair was "fooling around" with leftover fabric on Grace's ping pong table when the idea hit them.

"We wished we could get clothes for Webkinz," says Grace. Their big idea was put on hiatus as they wrapped up another year of school, but it was not forgotten. When the summer rolled around they decided to focus on an endeavor to bring their stylish creations of ponchos and sweaters for Webkinz and other stuffed animals to more kids.

Webkinz is the latest toy craze to define an era in toys. Cabbage Patch dolls were the must have toy for Christmas in 1983. In 1996, Tickle Me Elmo sold out in stores almost instantly. Then Beanie Babies were all the rage in the mid-nineties, for kids and collectors alike.

Although Webkinz has not sparked

Village workshop Saturday

Grab a cup of coffee down in the Village on Saturday morning then head over to the Town Hall auditorium for a public workshop on the findings and future of the Cohasset Village. The Concord Square Development Company is inviting all Cohasset residents to the workshop, held from 9a.m. to 12p.m. Public involvement and input on this ongoing project is at the forefront.

"We're hoping for a good turnout."
— Angus Jennings, consultant

"We're hoping for a good turnout," says Angus Jennings, principal for the project. The workshop will present the results of extensive market research in and around Cohasset. An in-depth discussion on the potential new zoning policies to promote investment within approved design guidelines and architectural visualizations of potential new investment. The entire consultant team — including planners, architects, an engineer and a market researcher — will be in attendance to present and answer any questions.

The format will be interactive and, after an initial presentation, will allow for substantial public input and discussion. All interested citizens, Village landowners and merchants are encouraged to attend to learn about the work done so far and to share opinions and idea about the Village.

The workshop will run from 9a.m. to 12p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium tomorrow, Saturday (Aug. 18).

Tradd finds niche at Board of Health

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Board of Health office always has something going on. From septic approvals to litter on the streets to food safety to collecting mercury, it is a busy place tucked on the second floor in the old part of Town Hall. In the thick of it all is Tara Tradd.

Although Tradd's job title is health inspector, the name doesn't fairly express the broad spectrum of duties she has assumed. Tradd started working in the Board of Health office eight and a half years ago. She was originally hired as an administrative assistant to manage the many aspects for the Board of Health office, but over the years her job has evolved to be much more than answering phones and filing paperwork.

"Joe (Godzik, health agent) encouraged me along the way to pursue more education and he took me out into the field," says Tradd. She and Godzik have always worked closely together, sharing the same office and dealing with day-to-day issues.

"She's smart, she's wonderful with people. She does a great job," says Godzik, "she's our first line of defense for the Board of Health."

Tradd handles the majority of the incoming calls to the Board of Health and if there are any walk-in questions. She takes action if there is a complaint for an overflowing dumpster or an unsanitary public restroom.

"I like how it's always changing, there's definitely no room for boredom," says Tradd. During our interview she shuffled through files, answered e-mails and phone calls, and pulled up pages of information with the click of the computer mouse, "I enjoy being able to give people the right answers."

And answer them she does. She can talk about West Nile Virus and EEE, field inquiries about ticks or perc tests and septic systems, or get residents Officer Lawrence Ainslie installs new numbers to the police station at 62 Elm St. during the police and fire departments' 2003 public safety campaign urging all property owners to install numbers on their houses and mailboxes. Ainslie, who retired in 2004, was killed Saturday in an automobile accident.

Police stunned by tragic news

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset police are still in shock over the tragic death of former officer Lawrence "Larry" Ainslie.

Described as a "really nice guy" by his peers, Ainslie's life was cut short on Interstate 95 in southeast Georgia at about 3 p.m. last Saturday when the SUV that his son, Adam Ainslie, was driving overturned. Both men were ejected from the vehicle. Ainslie, 52, died at the scene and Adam was badly hurt, but is expected to recover.

Detective Sgt. Gregory Lennon said Ainslie, who was hired as a full-time officer in January of 1983, was "very well liked."

Lennon was on the midnight shift with Ainslie for two years after he joined the force in 1995.

"He had a very colorful outlook on life," Lennon said. "Despite the seriousness of the work – he could bring some levity to the job."

Lennon estimated that about two-thirds of the 18-officer department were on board before Ainslie retired and remember him well.

Retired Chief Brian Noonan said Ainslie — whose uncle was the late Henry Ainslie, who served many years a selectman — was born and brought up in Cohasset. He was living in Hanson before he took an early retirement and moved to Florida. Ainslie, who was divorced but remained close to his ex-wife, had a son, Adam, and a daughter, Elizabeth of Cohasset.

Ainslie was very close to Adam, a musician, who lived with him in Florida, and enjoyed traveling with him to events.

Noonan said after Ainslie retired he came back for a Memorial Day barbecue at Noonan's home and was doing well and was really happy.

Lennon said Ainslie was really enjoying his retirement and his fellow officers "felt good for him because he was feeling good."

"The news of the accident came as a total shock," Lennon said. "Everyone was really floored and taken aback. It is terrible that his life was cut short like that.

"He was a nice guy and will be missed greatly."

McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home is handling the arrangements, which have not been finalized. Cohasset police provided a motorcycle escort for Ainslie from the airport yesterday to Cohasset.

Solicitation not supported by fire department

Fire Chief Robert Silvia said he received a call this week from a concerned resident who was disturbed by the high pressure telephone sales pitch used by an organization called Firefighters Support Services Inc. Silvia did some research and found the company, which is permitted, is based in Troy, Mich., and is so new that there are no financial records on file.

"The Cohasset Fire Department has not received any financial donations from Firefighters Support Services and it is not affiliated with the charitable organization," he said.

Local teens face alcohol charge

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A Black Rock Road resident notified a police officer after seeing three underage youths jump into a car with a cooler of beer. The resident approached the officer who was responding to an unrelated call on Jerusalem Road near the Greek Church at about 8 p.m., Wednesday (Aug. 8).

The officer stopped the Jeep that was traveling toward Sandy Beach and identified the three inside. The boys, who were 17, 18, and 19 and all lived in Cohasset, were placed under arrest for being minors in possession of alcohol.

The teens would not tell police who provided them with the beer. Police confiscated 15, 12-ounce cans of Miller Lite and 18, 12-ounce cans of Busch Natural Light in the cooler in the Jeep. The Jeep was towed and the teens were taken to the station where they were booked and later bailed. They were arraigned the following day at Quincy District Court.

Denver man

Police arrested a 17-year-old Denver man who had been asked to leave a party on South Main Street after he allegedly damaged the mailbox structure that serves four homes near the 300 block of S. Main St. The incident occurred at about 12:30 a .m. Sunday (Aug. 12).

Police said the caller gave a good description of the man right down to his hair color, shirt and pants and the fact he was carrying a duffel bag. Police found the man who, they said, punched the mailboxes cutting his hand and then banged into the structure with his shoulder knocking it over.

He was charged with vandalizing property.

Teens on bikes

A Cohasset police officer who was on patrol saw two teens riding bicycles in the Route 3A/Beechwood Street area at about midnight on Monday (Aug. 6). The officer thought the teens, who were later identified as being 16 and 14 years old, appeared to be too young to be out that late. As it turned out, the 14-year-old was having a sleepover at his house and snuck out with his guest, the 16-year-old, who lives in Hanover. Police contacted the 14-year-old's mother and brought the boys home. The bikes were taken to the station where they were picked up the next day.

Suspended license

After stopping a 46-year-old Hull woman for only having one number plate on her GMC Jimmy, the officer discovered her license had been suspended for not paying citations in Florida. The incident occurred on Tuesday, Aug. 7 at about 12:30 p.m.

The woman will be summonsed to court for operating on a suspended license, police said. Sgt. William Quigley explained that all 50 states have reciprocity agreements and share information. He said if a driver has outstanding citations in other states, the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles will be notified and suspend the driver's license until settlement is made. The driver faces stiff fines with the state in which the violation occurred and also reinstatement fees in Massachusetts.

The woman was not allowed to drive home and contacted a friend at a local business near the traffic stop who drove the car.

MV accidents

• With the help of a video surveillance camera at Shaw's, police were able to determine the plate number of a van that had backed into a BMW parked in the supermarket parking lot. The incident was reported on Aug. 6. Police are trying to determine who was driving the van that is registered to a company. The incident remains under investigation. The damage to the BMW was about $500.

• A water hydrant that was apparently struck by a motor vehicle on Margin Street has to be replaced by the water department, police said. A water department employee discovered the damage to the hydrant last Wednesday (Aug. 8) and an officer responded to the scene to view the damage, which appeared to be caused by a motor vehicle. Police do not know when the accident occurred.

• The owner of a 2001 Chevy pickup truck went into Shaw's last Thursday and when he came out he found a note on his windshield from a third party who had witnessed a black 2000 BMW back into his truck in the parking lot and then drive away. The note included the plate number. The vehicle was registered to a 53-year-old Scituate man, who told police he did not know he had bumped into the pickup. Police took the man at his word and after completing an accident report, the two parties are settling with their insurance companies.

• In a single-car accident, a 2003 Toyota Land Cruiser operated by a 46-year-old Cohasset woman hit a tree Sunday (Aug. 12) off Linden Drive. The woman told people she was distracted by a child in the car and drove off the side of the road as she was approaching one of the turns in the road.

There were no injuries and police did not issue a citation.

• A 2003 Toyota RAV4 backed into a gray 2006 BMW on Border Street near the Old Salte House on Sunday (Aug. 12) at about 1:35 p.m. Police said the operator of the Toyota, a 73-year-old Cohasset woman, said she did not see the BMW behind her. The driver of the BMW was letting passengers out on Border Street when the Toyota hit the driver's side, causing more than $1,000 in damage. The operator of the BMW was a 42-year-old Rhode Island man. Since the accident occurred on a private way (in the parking lot of the Old Salte House), police could not issue a citation.

• A 2000 Land Rover SUV that had been parked in the DiNero's lot for several days was damaged by a U-Haul rental truck that entered the lot to turn around. As it was turning, the U-Haul, which was being operated by a 42-year-old Ohio woman, ended up hitting the passenger side of the Land Rover, police said. Police left information about the incident for the vehicle owner with the manager at the restaurant. The incident occurred Sunday (Aug. 12) at about 4:30 p.m.

Drunks

• Responding to a call about a man stumbling into a liquor store last Thursday (Aug. 9) at bout 8:40 p.m., police caught up with the green Caravan and determined that the man was a passenger in the vehicle and had been denied service at the liquor store. The 56-year-old Scituate woman driving the van was advised to take her friend home, police said.

• A 23-year-old man from Ireland was taken into protective custody by a detail officer at the Music Circus after he had had too much to drink and caused a slight disturbance during the Beach Boys concert last Friday (Aug. 10). Police later released the man, who was staying in Boston, to a family member.

• Police drove a man home to Scituate after finding him sleeping in the bushes off Parking Way in the Village. A person came to the station at 7:10 p.m. on Saturday (Aug. 11), to report seeing a man passed out in the bushes at that location. Police located the man and drove him home.

Door kicked in

Police responded to a report of a breaking and entering at about 6 p.m. on Tuesday (Aug. 7). The 61-year-old Cushing Street resident reported someone had kicked in the door of her home. Police said nothing appears to have been stolen and detectives are talking to neighbors to see if anyone saw anything.

Bikes left

Police responded to a call about two bicycles that appeared to have been dumped in the bushes off Jerusalem Road by the Greek Church last Wednesday (Aug. 8). Police recovered a female's bike, a Raleigh Mojave, and a Schwinn Spitfire. Police are checking with Hingham and Hull police departments to see if any of those bikes have been reported stolen. They are newer bicycles, police said.

Landscaping lights

The Cohasset Swim Center notified police about broken landscaping lights along the walkway at the center last Thursday (Aug. 9). It appears that someone may have kicked the lights, police said. There were no other incidents reported in the area.

Mailbox vandal

Another mailbox was vandalized on Reservoir Road. Police said the resident reported the incident, which occurred Saturday night into Sunday morning (Aug. 5) later than the others in the Old Pasture Road, Reservoir Road and upper Pleasant Street area. Police said they have a witness and have identified a suspect and are in the process of seeing if more evidence can be developed.

Legion seeking donations for those deployed

The George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 is seeking donations of toiletries and other items for those deployed to Iraq and Afghanistan. Donations may be dropped off at the Legion Post on Summer Street daily after 3 p.m. or at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank branches on 3A or in the village.

Monetary donations are also accepted. Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with "Soldiers Project" written in the memo line on the check. Checks can be mailed to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. The following items are being collected at the American Legion for deployed servicemen and women:

'Old' Town Hall ready for renovation

Applications for architect due Aug. 29

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In 1857, the Town of Cohasset finished the construction of their first and only Town Hall. Since then the Town Hall has stood as a symbol of Cohasset, incorporated into the town seal and as a part of the picturesque landscape of the Common. According to David Wadsworth's history of the town hall, the building has served as a theater, a private school, a movie theater, a basketball court, a ballroom and a jailhouse to name just a few uses over the last 150 years.

The last time the old part of Town Hall was updated was in the 1920s. Now 2007, the old portion is overdue for some major renovation. Resident David Farrag saw the need to revamp the enduring symbol of Cohasset and decided to take action before last spring's Town Meeting. Voters at Town Meeting agreed with him and allocated $35,000 of Community Preservation funds for a historic restoration architectural firm to advise the Town on how to best repair the "old" part of Town Hall.

"It's something that needs to be done," said Farrag in a phone interview. The antique portion of Town Hall houses an auditorium with entry foyer and several second story offices for town departments. This past week, the town began advertising a request for qualifications from interested architects and firms. The responses are due by Wednesday, Aug. 29 at noon.

"We received six inquires for the forms on the first day," said Farrag, although firms will need to return the completed application to be considered, "there's definitely interest out there."

Once all applications are submitted a Design Review Committee will be appointed by Town Manager Bill Griffin to supervise and advise the town during the project. The committee will do additional research prior to the hiring of the architect. The committee will review the résumés submitted, as well as investigate past projects of a similar nature for each firm and check references. Based on the ratings from the Design Review Committee, Griffin will ultimately choose the architect.

"We know more or less what's needed, but we need the architect to advise us on the best methods to complete the project," explained Farrag. The architect will outline a schedule for the project, which will likely be done in several phases to accommodate on-going town activities.

The Town Hall is a unique building because of the auditorium, a feature not typical as Town Halls go. Farrag hopes to find an architect or firm with experience in renovating old theatres.

The town plans to incorporate sustainable features into the renovation, which will likely involve an overhaul of the heating, lighting and electrical systems.

"Number one we're going to be looking for energy conservation," said Farrag, which may simply take the form of additional insulation and the restoration of aging windows, "in the end we want to determine how we can save money and be more energy efficient."

In the application form, the town indicates a LEED (Leadership in energy and environment design) architect is desired criteria. The Alternative Energy Committee and their recently hired consultants will likely advise in the process as needed.

The town will need to walk a fine line between historical renovation and creating a functional space for future town use.

"We're not trying to restore [the Town Hall] for 2007 or 2008, we're trying to renovate a building for 2015, 2020. We need to look ahead to the needs of the town," said Farrag. As an example, the auditorium does not have the electrical capability for electronic voting machines, a technology not far off into the future. Updating the wiring and ensuring proper fire exits are in place are high on the list as well. Farrag also hopes the architect will design plans to make every space of the Town Hall useable, from the ticket booth to the bathrooms.

While the majority of other town buildings have been renovated over the past decade, the Town Hall has been "left as an orphan. We want to give it its due," said Farrag.

Although a town building, Farrag does not envision going before Town Meeting with an immense price tag and expect the town to foot the entire bill. He plans to seek out state grants for historic renovation and initiate a private fundraising effort. The Cohasset Dramatic Club, the primary users of the auditorium, will be working on this project and offered to contribute funds to the construction. Community Preservation funds will probably be sought, as well as allocations from the capital budget.

"We'll most likely have something to say at the fall special Town Meeting," but it may only be an update, says Farrag. "The time has come to fix this place up."

Museum brings the world to Cohasset kids

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"I hope kids walk out of here with a good understanding of what's actually happening in the world and why we need to change it."
— Julie Laugelle, museum manager.

There's no denying Cohasset is just one small part of a global society, but each person in Cohasset can learn and do something to improve the world we live in. Tucked in the rear of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is a place where the youngest Cohasset residents can learn and discover the world around us. The Our World Global Discovery Museum exhibit and playrooms strives to bring an educational and fun experience for kids and adults alike.

The museum's tagline is "opening the minds of children to the world and their unique place within it" and with a range of diverse activities and programs, it holds true. The two-floor museum has three rooms, each targeted towards different ages. In that ways, Our World has something to offer for every family with kids.

"Small world is good for crawling kids," says Julie Laugelle, museum manager. The enclosed space has a play kitchen, a tool bench, a small slide and plenty of age-appropriate toys.

The latest addition to the museum is "Kid's World" opened in May and is designed for kids ages 4-7 years old. The room, which also doubles as a space for the museum's myriad programs, has a castle, a playhouse and multi-cultural dress up clothes. The wall is adorned with a growing collection of different flags from around the world. Between the two rooms is a space for arts and crafts; each week there is a new craft to construct so there is always something different to do.

On the third floor is the centerpiece of the museum, an exhibit created by the World Wildlife Fund. Our World purchased the Biodiversity 911 exhibit — which used to travel around the country but is now permanently featured in Cohasset — from the World Wildlife Fund. Biodiversity is the variety of life on earth, and through the exhibit, children are able to take a closer look at ways they can help the earth's wildlife and natural resources through six kiosks, or learning stations, each focusing on a different environmental issue. Guided by friendly cartoon characters, children learn ways they can proactively help the environment of the world they live in.

"I hope kids walk out of here with a good understanding of what's actually happening in the world and why we need to change it," says Laugelle. There's plenty of interactive activities to keep kids involved and learning. Her two kids are examples of how much the museum has to offer, they have spent a large part of their summer at the museum and have yet to grow bored with it, Laugelle says.

"Sometimes I sit back and I laugh at what the kids come up with doing. It's the unique things kids do with all this stuff," says Laugelle, "one kids will use something one way and then next use it in a completely different way." Seeing the kids' imaginations at work is one of her favorite parts of the job — the toys and exhibits are only props for kid's imaginations.

Laugelle plans on furthering the museum's focus on global cultures by incorporating an exploration of different cultures around the world. Starting this fall, the museum will have a display on a different country's culture through crafts, books and posters. Germany will be the first country, she says.

Our World has had a busy summer, with families coming in to seek relief from the summer heat or to get out of the house on a rainy day, says Laugelle. With a museum membership of 125 families from all over the South Shore and many walk-in visitors, Our World is a buzz of activity. A schedule of new fall programming is currently in the works.

"There's always ways to improve," says Laugelle. The museum has plans to add a gift shop and a birthday/ program room once funds are in place.

Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum is open Wednesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is $5 per person, or free for members. The museum is located at 100 Sohier Street, just behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and next door to the Music Circus. Visit the museum's Web site at http://www.ourworld3.homestead.com

Are you on the active voters' list?

If a voter has moved to another city or town, they still need to sign and return the postcard

Recently the Board of Registrars have mailed confirmation notices to voters who did not respond to the annual street listing (census) by the first of June. This mailing notifies the voter that their name has been removed from the active voting list and has been placed on the inactive voting list. In order to activate themselves they must return the postcard and they will be restored immediately to the active voters' list.

If a voter has moved to another city or town, they still need to sign and return the postcard. Their name will be immediately removed from the voters' list in Cohasset To vote, they must register to vote in their new city /town. Mail-in forms are available.

If postcards are not returned the voter will be removed from the voters' list. Also, they will be removed if they do not vote in at least one of the next two state elections or take other action that would reinstate them as an active voter.

Cohasset Republican Town Committee Cookout scheduled for Sept. 9

The highlight of the summer is the annual Cohasset Republican Town Committee Cookout, which will take place at 4:30 p.m., on Sunday, Sept. 9, at Lou Harvey's home, 465 King St., Cohasset. Tickets are $25 per person and $40 per couple. After Sept. 4, tickets are $30 per person and $45 per couple. Invited speakers are "Amo" Hougton, former U.S. Congressman, 1986 through 2001, from Corning, N.Y., and Mickie Edwards, a former U.S. Congressman, 1977 through 1993, from Oklahoma. Local elected officials will also be invited.

To make reservations, send checks payable to Cohasset Republican Town Committee and mail to Judy Volungis, 234 Forest Ave., Cohasset, MA 02043. Call Julie Guild, chairman, at 781-383-6443, or Polly Logan at 781-383-0031 for more information.

Sunset at the Abbey: Brass and More

Atlantic Symphony Chamber Players continue their tradition of a summer's-end concert on the lawn at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham at 4 p.m., on Sunday, Aug. 26.

Featured musicians include Innovata, a brass quintet that includes Atlantic Symphony trumpeter Matt Ara. The five musicians have performed around the world and have appeared with the Boston Symphony, Boston Pops, United States Navy's jazz ensemble The Commodores, and other ensembles. Innovata has played aboard the U.S.S. Constitution by invitation of the United States Navy, at PNC Park by invitation of the Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team, on various public radio stations and at the Liederkranz Club in New York City. The wide range of experience that each person brings to the group compliments the classical, jazz, Dixieland and swing repertoire Innovata presents. Plus, Innovata places special emphasis on education. All of the musicians have their own private music studios and/or hold college-level teaching positions. Wherever they travel, Innovata always tries to make themselves available to young audiences.

Also on the program are Atlantic Symphony clarinetist Juliet Lai, oboist Mie Shiraishi, violinist Peter Krysa, and pianist Konstantinos Papadakis.

Bring a beach chair or blanket and picnic, to celebrate an evening of fun and relaxing music in the company of friends. Cost is $15 adults, $10 seniors, youth through age 18 free. Tickets will be available at the gate, or in advance at La Petite Maison, Hingham Square; Buttonwood Books, Cohasset, Abbey Bookstore.

Call 781-740-5694 or visit atlanticsymphony.org for more information.

Grand old hall

Although Town Halls are often the places that house historic documents and records — including a community's archives — they are not always historic places themselves.

Scituate's Town Hall, for example, dates back to the early 1960s when the high school was built. Marshfield's Town Hall is a modern structure in a shopping plaza and Norwell's Town Hall is in a former elementary school. Hingham's Town Hall is in the former Central Junior High School.

The "old part" of Cohasset Town Hall dates back to 1857 and has been one of the centerpieces of the town common ever since.

Currently that grant old structure needs major renovation. Voters at the spring annual Town Meeting allocated $35,000 from the Community Preservation Fund for an architect to advise the town on how to repair the old part of the building. The search for a historic restoration architectural firm is now under way.

Over the years Town Hall has served as a theater, movie theater, private school, basketball court, ballroom, town library, and jailhouse.

"From its beginning Town Hall was intended to be a multi-function building housing municipal offices and serving as a vital center for diverse community activities," town archivist and local historian David Wadsworth wrote in "The Story of Town Hall."

He writes that during the late 1800s Town Hall became the site of one of Cohasset's most colorful community endeavors, the annual Washington's Birthday Fancy Dress Ball. "Each year that gala event was a highlight of the community's winter season, as townspeople in a diversity of costumes and masks packed one of the halls to dance and admire each other's artistic talents, to the delight of all."

Wadsworth writes at the other end of the scale, the town built its first jail in the Town Hall's cellar.

"This early lockup consisting of two primitive and miniscule cells, frequently became the temporary lodging place for tramps or transients seeking a place to stay over night while they passed through town. There being no full-time police department at the time, the lockup was presided over by a lockup keeper appointed by the town's selectmen."

There was a move afoot in the 1920s to construct a new classical, brick town hall in the space adjacent to the existing building, Wadsworth stated. The town took by eminent domain the plot of land immediately adjacent to the older hall that included a large Victorian mansion house. Selectmen evicted the owner and the house was razed. However, Town Meeting voters changed their minds before the old town hall was declared surplus and placed up for auction and the 19th-century structure was saved. The town hall municipal parking lot is where the Victorian house once stood.

In the summer of 1934, two brash young actors, Humphrey Bogart and Broderick Crawford, came to town. The actors were members of the South Shore Players that performed on the Town Hall stage all summer.

Bogart was married to Mary Phillips, a star who was better known than her husband at that time. Crawford was also described at the time as the son of Helen Broderick, a well-known actress.

Times have changed for Cohasset Town Hall but its importance to Cohasset history has not.

We are happy that efforts are being made to ensure that Town Hall remains a fixture in Cohasset for all time.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Travel at your own risk'

TO THE EDITOR:

I read with great interest the Cohasset Mariner's weekly report on the Greenbush Line project, and the work in progress in building a sidewalk and improving road conditions on Forest Avenue.

For over a week, it has certainly not escaped the attention of the many people who drive on Forest Avenue that the road condition between the Wheelwright Park entrance and North Main Street, is currently horrible to a degree not experienced before. Even driving at 5MPH gives you the feeling that a transaxle break is imminent.

This reminds me of my youth in the Belgian Congo in the fifties, when non-urban roads gave you the same shaky feeling of driving on corrugated sheet metal. We were advised not to drink milk before driving, for fear that it would promptly turn to butter.

Of course the problem on that section of the Avenue is due to the fact that the surface was scraped with that famous huge machine, before laying new paving (hopefully more durable than all previous efforts).

I, and, I am sure, everyone else, can agree that such scraping is necessary, and that the consequences must be endured.

However, it seems that the scraping was done — and then everyone went on their merry two-week vacations way, or just went off to doing something else. This reflects poor scheduling. Couldn't the good folks have done this scraping after their vacations or other job, so that the current situation would have been inflicted upon the driving public only for the very few days it takes to complete the resurfacing? Surely, the sign "travel at your own risk" is taking a singularly ominous significance under current conditions!

Robert Pierre
120 Forest Ave.

Addendum: Needless to say that they completed the resurfacing Aug. 15! It took only a matter of hours for the entire ravaged stretch, so the question remains why we had to endure 1-1/2 weeks of this misery.

Rec Commission thanks Playground Program sponsors

TO THE EDITOR:

As we conclude another successful summer, the Cohasset Recreation Commission extends their most sincere gratitude to the following local business and civic organizations for their financial support for our seven-week Playground Program

Goodwin Graphics, Pilgrim Bank, Stop & Shop, Cohasset Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #9146, Kristine A. Grazioso, DMD, Feng Shui Restaurant, South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset Collision Inc., George H. Mealy Post #118, Fiori's Exxon, The Good Sport, Goodale Insurance Agency, Lehr and Barnes Insurance Agency and MKR Building Solutions.

Via sponsorship generosity, community interest and support we were able to enhance our ability to serve the community through our day camp-like seven weeks Playground Program for children age 3 1/2 through 12 years.

Playground Program sponsors names/logos are printed on all the children's and staff's T-shirts – approximately 250 shirts total. Further, sponsors are listed on many of our year-round publications – sponsorships are available starting in March of each year by calling the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109 for letters and information.

Our deepest gratitude is extended on behalf of the children, parents and playground staff to this year's sponsors.

'I am not buying it!'

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JOANN MIRISE

It's official. I am more than half way through my yearlong project of not shopping. Fear of failure prevented me from telling anyone about my Not Buying It project for the first five months. The only ones who knew were my husband and two close friends, and I would have likely not told them, but I was certain they would start to seriously worry about me if I wasn't shopping. Is she feeling OK? Is she depressed? While not a shopping addict by any means, I was clearly on autopilot when it came to my consumer habits. And as a result of learning more about the connection between consumerism and the threats of global warming and oil consumption, I knew I had to do something. Something big.

So on Jan. 1, after thinking about it for weeks, I made a pledge to not buy anything new for one year. My motivation to start this project was simple: Our world is in trouble because we use too much stuff. Therefore, if I was to fundamentally make a difference, I would have to use less. Little did I know how transforming this project would be on my life. What started out as a statement for a cause in which I believe became a theme I will follow forever.

To be clear, I am still buying things. Food, of course. And anything that we use up like soap or toilet paper. I choose "green" products for all of these purchases whenever possible. Saving money is not my primary motivation, although it is an obvious benefit, so I am still going out to dinner and using services like the hair salon. For everything else, I created some personal rules. For example, if I need clothes for myself or the children, I only buy used. The principle being if we do not create the demand and the market, the products will not be made in the first place. My exceptions to this rule are socks, underwear and kid's shoes. What a surprise to find out how much I liked the experience of finding unique, high quality pieces on the consignment/vintage circuit. I liked it so much in

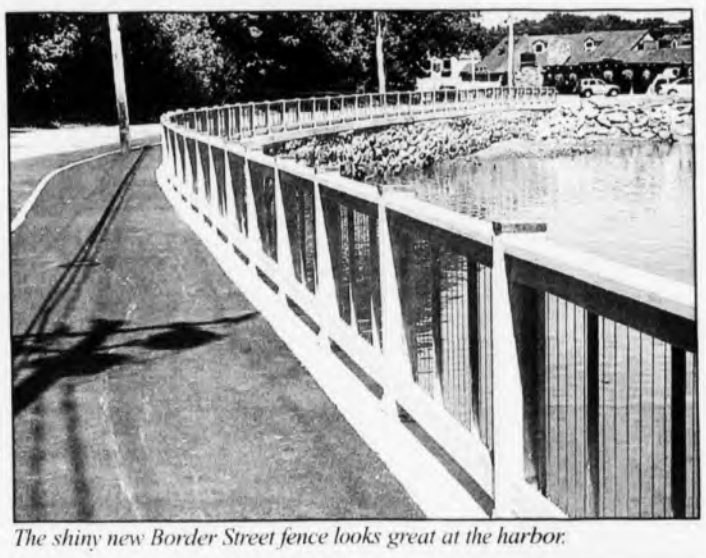
Story behind the railroad fence

MAKING TRACKS



TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush fence arrives in Village Center – Last week, a subcontractor began the installation of the fencing, which will border the Greenbush line from Smith Place to the end of the Town Parking Lot. Like a lot of Greenbush actions, there is quite a story behind this final fence. If we turn back the clock prior to 2001, there were a series of about 25 hearings held by the Massachusetts Historic Commission (MHC) at the Army Corps of Engineers (ACOE) regional headquarters in Concord. The topic of these hearings was the creation of Greenbush design standards that would assure that the impending Greenbush project would protect and maintain, as best possible, the historic fabric of the five Greenbush Towns. As a part of this hearing, the MBTA agreed to provide "steel picket fence" in the historic center villages. This agreement would apply to the center of Cohasset Village from Smith Place to the far end of the Town Parking Lot. As a part of their submittals, the MBTA provided a single poor quality black & white photo of the fence they proposed to supply. As a participant in these hearings, The Town accepted this design expecting greater detail as the project advanced.

However, when the MBTA finally fleshed out their specifications and provided a sample of the fencing they intended to provide, it was flimsy looking, bolted together hollow tubular steel with vinyl caps on the pickets rather than the solid welded wrought iron that we had expected. Multiple Towns objected to the quality of this fence material and in June of 2005, MHC held another hearing at the Army Corps of Engineers concerning the fence material. The upshot was that the MBTA was instructed to provide solid, galvanized, fencing, painted black. We believe that this solid material will withstand the test of time substantially better than the bolted hollow tubular fence. The MBTA objected strenuously for several years, but in the final analysis provided what they were instructed to supply. We are glad to see this fence finally being installed and believe that the Town will benefit over time from this robust fence and its historical appearance.

Speaking of fence — If you haven't taken a look at the seawall that was recently rebuilt from Atlantica to the Mill River Marina take a walk or drive by and look at the new fence. We've had a number of good comments from residents about the appearance of this fence. Unfortunately, when we repaired the harbor wall from Lawrence Wharf to Cohasset Harbor Inn the funding available from the grant was not sufficient to replace the old fence with this new design.

Greenbush Station progress – Although it's a bit hard to see from either Route 3A or North Main Street, we thought you'd like to see what is happening at the Cohasset Station. The parking area for more than 400 cars has received its base coat of asphalt. The electricians are wiring the lights in the parking area and erecting the light poles on their concrete bases as seen in the accompanying photo. In the background the keen eye will be able to make out the station platform just visible through the trees.

The walkways to the station platform are being graded in preparation for paving. Rough grading has also started on the station site for the walkway that will connect the station to Wompatuck State Park.

All in all, the Cashman construction workers are literally everywhere (or at least it seems that way). The last minute details that must be completed prior to having an operational railroad are numerous. We imagine that the project management is eagerly watching over their shoulders waiting for that magical day when trains are operating.

Workers install new solid steel fencing along the tracks.

The Cohasset Train Station stop will be a familiar sight to commuters.

Erratum – In a previous article regarding Fire Department preemption of the new N. Main St. traffic light, we misstated the preemption scheme. When a fire emergency vehicle approaches the new traffic light it will turn GREEN for the approaching vehicle(s). All other directions will turn red, unless train preemption is active.

Forest Avenue – One of the primary caveats of the construction business is that we are at the mercy of the subcontractors. So we sit along side of all of the very patient Forest Avenue residents we wait for the paving contractor to add the base coat of asphalt to the very rough gravel surface of Forest Ave. Well, drum roll please… The balance of the base asphalt is scheduled to be done on August 15th. So, the gods being favorable, it should be done by the time you read this. Those of you who are brave enough to travel Forest Avenue probably have noticed that the curbing is being installed as soon as the base asphalt surface has been laid. It is now really obvious where the curb will be. Once the curb is installed, the sidewalks get their final-grading and paving.

You will also notice that Forest Avenue has been cold planed from Holley Circle to Jerusalem Road. While not as rough as the recently graded surface, that cold planed surface is still rough. Once the sidewalks and curb are completed, a finish coat of asphalt will be placed on the road, from end to end. We are purposefully holding off on the final paving until just after Labor Day when the Hull project on Green Hill is scheduled to be complete. This way, the trucks from their project will not damage our new paving. Thus, we expect that the final Forest Ave. paving will be completed around mid-September.

Savior of the Marshpee

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The Mashpee Wampanoags are riding high these days, with towns in southeastern Massachusetts fighting for the privilege of letting them build a gaming casino — and, by the way, cutting them in on the deal at the same time.

I wonder if any of them are going to raise a glass to William Apes. I wonder if any of them ever heard of William Apes, the man who sparked a downtrodden group of individual Indians into thinking of themselves once again as a tribe.

Mashpee, or Marshpee, as it was called, in the 1830s was little more than an Indian reservation, ruled by a three-man board of overseers appointed by the governor to protect them "against the frauds and wicked devices of unprincipled and profligate white men."

There were an estimated 315 Indians living in Marshpee at the time, the vast majority of them intermarried with other races and many of the men out to sea as whalers. The overseers rented land to white men for lumbering and grazing and gave them free run of the fishing streams.

The pastor of the Indian-built church was Phineas Fish, an orthodox Congregationalist, a missionary appointed and funded by Harvard College, who resented the fact that most of the Marshpee Indians were attracted to the revival spirit that went with the Baptist and Methodist faiths.

Enter William Apes.

Apes, born in western Mass to an Indian mother and a part-Indian father, was a reformed alcoholic turned Methodist preacher. He was visiting the Pequot reservation in Connecticut when he heard of the troubles in Marshpee and left for Cape Cod.

He attended one of Fish's sermons in the Indian meetinghouse and was stunned to find the congregation almost entirely white. Fish told him that the Indians could not be trusted with too much freedom and he doubted whether they ever could be.

Apes called a meeting to discuss Indian grievances. The date was May 31, 1833. Out of it came a Declaration of Independence-like memorial to the governor outlining those grievances and resolving:

"That we as a tribe will rule ourselves, and have the right to do so for all men are born free and Equal says the Constitution of the Country.

"That we will not permit any white man to come upon our plantation to cut or carry off wood or hay (or) any other article with out our permission after the first of July next.

"That we shall put resolutions in force after that date July next with the penalty of binding and throwing them from the plantation If they will not stay a way with out."

The Rev. Phineas Fish was advised to "be on the lookout for another home" with the admonition:

"We do not believe in your trying to make us believe that we have not as good rights to the table of the Lord as others that we are kept back merely because our skin is of a different complexion and we find nothing in so doing to justify you in the scripture."

The rehabilitation of the Marshpee Indians didn't some all at once, of course. It was not until the following March, after the Indians' fight gained national attention, that the former reservation was raised to a district with the right to elect three selectmen under a single commissioner and treasurer appointed by the governor.

The Rev. Fish was a different story. Harvard cut his stipend in half in 1836. The Indians themselves carried him out of their church and changed the locks in 1840, but still he persisted. He finally quit in 1846, sold his house in Marshpee and disappeared.

So THAT's the secret?

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

But I can say that this is a book that did not add many "deep thoughts" to my life.

I finally did it. I picked up The Secret, the book/video phenomenon that promises to tell you the secret to a better life. It was right there in the library under new nonfiction and it kept beckoning to me, "You know you want to … C'mon, admit it, you're dying to know the big secret." I caved and picked it up, put it down, picked it up, put it down and, finally, I picked it up and signed it out. My curiosity got the best of me.

And you know what the big secret is? That you can make LOTS of money by telling people in 184 repetitive and redundant pages that "like attracts like" and to "think good thoughts." (My brief glimpse of the video confirmed that it's much of the same.) You can read more about my not so good thoughts on the book below. First, however, I have to applaud the author. It's a brilliant way to make money: tell people that all they have to do to get money (note, I didn't use the term "make money"), lose weight, or fall in love is to buy this video or book. It's the perfect business plan in our "Money for Nothing" society. Sting and Dire Straits were spot on with that song back in 1985, because today we live in a culture where everyone wants success, fame and happiness without having to do anything more than have a reality TV crew follow them around.

Now, I'm not saying that I disagree with the book's basic principle — that banishing negative thoughts will improve your life. Or even that some people can only get this message through reiteration of the same idea, page after page after page after page. But I can say that this is a book that did not add many "deep thoughts" to my life. Instead it's filled with doozies like:

"You have two sets of feelings: good feelings and bad feelings. And you know the difference between the two because one makes you feel good, and the other makes you feel bad.

Wow. Thanks for clearing that one up

"Begin right now to shout to the Universe, 'Life is so easy! Life is so good! All good things come to me!'"

I don't know about you, but if I ran up and down Jerusalem Road shouting this to the Universe, my neighbors would probably call the cops on me.

After all their "shouting out" recommendations, the authors then want you place your order with the Universe, just like you would "order from a catalog." Well, I hope that when I do this, that the person taking my order spent some time in customer service training at L.L. Bean. But, on a more serious note, is it just me, or is an analogy about shopping for material goods just so wrong in a book about the secret to a better life?

Hmmmm. I'll have to think about that while I put in my order with the Universe.

Dear Universe:

Please send me $1,000,000, a new laptop which still runs on Windows XP, and an iPhone (preferably one that's not a lemon). And, while we're at it, can you have it all delivered by a really hot UPS guy?

In the meantime, I'll be here doing absolutely nothing but thinking good materialistic thoughts just like The Secret told me to.

Sincerely,

Diane

SENIOR SCENE

Anna's End of Summer Picnic is Sept. 5

The following events are sponsored by Cohasset Elder Affairs at 3 North St. To register, call 781-383-9112.

Anna's End of Summer Picnic – Enjoy an end of summer picnic at Cohasset Sailing Club at noon, on Wednesday, Sept. 5. The theme this year is "The Great Western Barbeque." A prize will be awarded for the best western outfit. Entertainment provided by the Bartholomew, Cappers and Waynen Trio.

Spirit of Boston Lobster Luncheon Cruise – The Spirit of Boston has canceled the cruise.

CLASSES

Sign up for the following classes as soon as possible.

Beginners Italian – Professoressa Lanier Grassie will offer a five-week course that teaches conversational Italian and Italian culture from 7 to 8:30 p.m., Monday, Sept. 10. The cost is $30. A minimum of six registrants is required to begin class.

Line Dancing – Join Nancy Kramer for line dancing, from 1:15 to 2:15 p.m., beginning Sept. 18. The cost is $5 per class.

Senior Dance Aerobics – Join Karen Kirkendall from 8 to 8:45 a.m., each Tuesday and Thursday beginning Tuesday, Sept. 18, as she resumes dance aerobics classes. The cost is $3 per class.

Introduction to Tai Chi – This five-week program, which takes place from 10 to 11 a.m., begins Wednesday, Sept. 19. By increasing circulation and promoting deep breathing, tai chi directly enhances physical health. The instructor, C.J. Reardon, has taught tai chi for 13 years. The cost is $75 for the five-week program. A minimum of five registrants is required to begin the course.

Knitting – Edna Finegan will resume knitting classes from 1 to 3 p.m., Friday, Sept. 21.

"Straight Addictions Class" – Donna White, an addictions counselor at Lemuel Shattuck Hospital, will present this program from 11 a.m. to noon on Sept. 26. All are welcome to attend. Following the program, participants are invited to stay and enjoy a gourmet lunch prepared by the Angel Food Project.

Field of Honor flags pickup

Thomas Wigmore of the Sons of the American Legion and organizer of the Field of Honor installed over Memorial Day, has announced that those who paid for flags may pick them up from 8 –11 a.m., Saturday (Aug. 18) behind the Paul Pratt Library on Ripley Road near the playground.

Opting out of sewer connection won't be easy

Boards try to get on same page

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Most people in the Little Harbor area welcome the opportunity to connect to the town's sewer system.

But not everyone is happy.

There are a handful of residents, many of whom are senior citizens, for whom the hookup presents a financial hardship. Their septic systems, which might not pass Title 5, could still be adequate because they are not generating the wastewater that a large family would. (Title 5 is the state environmental code governing septic systems).

The Board of Health grappled with this issue at its meeting on Monday. The Sewer Commission has asked the health board for its comments on a "defined protocol" so the requests to opt out of a sewer connection are addressed uniformly.

Fred Quelle, 73, who owns an "uninsulated" summer home at 120 Nichols Road and attended Monday's meeting, is one such senior resident. Quelle, who did his homework in terms of presenting the health board with the home's water usage history over the past two years, might not get much relief even if he were able to obtain a waiver from hooking up.

If a delay is granted, a "stub" would be placed at the end of the property, but the resident would still have to pay the betterment not the annual operations and maintenance charges. The average sewer user, based on a family of four in the Central and North sewer districts, pays an average of $800 a year, not including the betterment.

In its memo to the health board, the Sewer Commission did point out that tax laws included a financial hardship provision that could delay property betterment charges until the property's sale. But that option would have to be pursued with town treasurer's office.

The septic system at Quelle's house, where he lives from June to October, dates back to 1890. Even though the house has nine bedrooms (including five in the servants' quarters) he estimated the house uses only 10 to 12 cubic feet a day of water. He explained that the 100-plus year old house would almost certainly be a "teardown" if it were sold. (Sewer usage is billed based on a property's water usage; the Sewer Commission has no mechanism in place to meter the water coming out of building).

"It seems ridiculous to spend the money for that small amount (of wastewater) to be put on the system," he said. Quelle explained he would be happy to work with the health board in terms of pumping the septic tank on the property.

The health board agreed that the conditions were stringent. Only fully compliant and functional systems could be granted a delayed hookup.

However, Board of Health member Robin Lawrence also told Quelle that a sewer connection could be viewed as a good thing for a potential buyer should he want to sell the home at some point.

Quelle explained that a recent broken, old water pipe on Nichols Road has moved up the timing for the expansion of the sewer district to his neighborhood. "The plan is to put the new water main and the new sewer main in at the same time," he said.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik explained that properties in the expanded Central District had to have fully compliant septic systems or were required to hook into the system.

Quelle said he is on a civil service pension and hooking up to the sewer system would "be the kind of bucks that I cannot afford."

Health board member Stephen Bobo expressed some frustration on the issue. "Our position should be: are these septic systems contributing to the pollution of Little Harbor," he said.

Town Meeting has allocated $15.2 million for the Little Harbor sewer expansion project which users will pay for through sewer betterment fees over a 20-year period. The project timeline should have all homes hooked up to the town sewer by 2011. The long-awaited project will result in 485 additional homes on town sewer and an updated (and expanded) wastewater treatment plant.

The town sewer expansion was mandated by the state through the Second Amended Final Judgment. The agreement goes all the way back to the late '70s, it was handed down by the state as a means of implementing the Clean Waters Act. In 1979, a complaint was filed alleging violation of the Act, which could have cost the town $10,000 per day in fines. As part of the settlement, the town consented to enter the Judgment.

In 1980, the town and the state agreed on the terms of the Judgment, but it was again amended in 1994 and 1997, when it became the Second Amended Judgment. It was modified again in 1998 and then, in 2006, underwent its final amendment.

As a result of the Judgment, the town embarked on two sewer projects, including an expansion of the Central Sewer District and the North Cohasset sewer project, which allowed residents to tie-in to capacity at the Hull treatment facility.

Delayed connections for Little Harbor District

The following process is being proposed:

- Resident makes a written request with at least two years worth of water consumption data (which provides a correlation to sewer usage). Proof of compliance with Title 5 and local Board of Health regulations.
- System cannot have been approved with any variance or repaired "best feasible" methods that would limit full Title 5 compliance. Pumping history will also be examined.
- Systems within 400 feet of a water body must include I/A (Innovative Alternative Treatment System) technologies for nutrient removal and have suitable treatment performance record for past two years.

If system is deemed fully compliant and functional, the sewer commission will review the request. If approved the resident would be granted with a "delay" and would not be required to connect to the system at that time. For a "delay" a sewer service stub would still be placed for the property and the resident would still have to pay the betterment. The Sewer Commission said this week it will not grant any exemptions for the Little Harbor District, just delays.

The Tilden Block, which includes Farsh Oriental Rugs at 1 N. Main St. was built in the early 1900s. Goodale is moving to 3A and the Silver Spoon has closed.

Changes at the top of S. Main Street

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Silver Spoon Cafe at 5 South Main St. closed its doors about 2-1/2 weeks ago.

At the end of the month, Goodale Company Insurance at 3 South Main is moving to Brigantine East on Route 3A.

Farsh Oriental Rugs at 1 South Main is moving into the former Goodale spot on Sept. 1.

And Hingham-based Home Center Sotheby's International Realty is opening an office at 1 South Main St., where Farsh Oriental Rugs is now.

A spokesman for Centerpoint Properties, which about 18 months ago bought the building that houses those retail locations and also four, one-bedroom apartments and an upstairs office, said the corporation has put a considerable amount of money into renovating the building. The building, which occupies the corner of South Main and Depot Court, also includes the Atlantic Brokerage Group, at 3 Depot Court.

The Centerpoint spokesman, who asked that his name not be used, said the historic building known as the Tilden Block dates back to early 1900s. In fact there is a "T" just under the peak of the roof facing South Main Street.

"All the renovations up until recently have been to the apartments," the spokesman said. The vestibule at the entrance to the upstairs apartments and upstairs office at 7 Depot Court has been completely redone.

Exterior painting to the property is a work in progress, he said.

Gail Petersen Bell, owner of Home Center Sotheby's International Realty, is excited about opening a Cohasset office in what she describes as the "premier retail location" in town. She said Home Center, which will renovate the space, has a grand opening planned for Oct. 25.

"The train coming through is really going to open the Cohasset real estate market to relocation and international clientele," she said. Bell said most international Sotheby offices are located in charming coastal communities from the Mediterranean and Caribbean to both U.S. coasts.

Ali Hashemi of Farsh Oriental Rugs has been at 1 South Main for 20 years. "I am happy to be staying in Cohasset," he said about moving next door.

But customers looking for the Silver Spoon's famous lobster/clam bisque, fish chowder or popular chicken sandwich are only going to find a " for lease" sign on the door.

Centerpoint said there have been some expressions of interest in the Silver Spoon site.

He would not comment on why the Silver Spoon has left but did say Centerpoint would be seeking "market rate rent" for the space. He said Centerpoint hopes to lease the space to another restaurant. "The space is outfitted for that and it would be good for the village."

The food license allows seating for 35 at the site, he said.

Owner Jack Stafford, who operated the Silver Spoon with his wife Carol, said he could not comment and would not elaborate on the reason the business has closed.

But he did say he wanted to thank his loyal customers. The Silver Spoon, which served breakfast and lunch, won several People's Choice Awards over the years, he said.

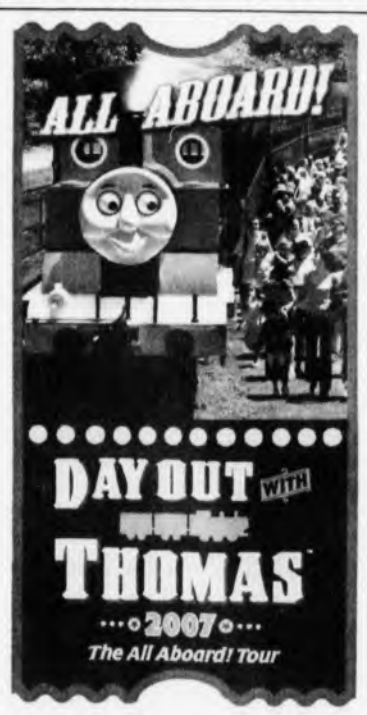
Stafford, who came out of retirement to run the eatery, bought the business from former Silver Spoon owners, Denise and Garry Bismore, back in the spring of 2002.

HEALTH NOTES

Obesity is an expanding public health crisis

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The news is not good about obesity. We live in a land of excess, and our waistlines show it. By 2015, 75 percent of adults will be overweight; 41 percent will be obese.



According to researchers at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health in the most recent issue of the journal Epidemiologic Reviews, the U.S. obesity prevalence increased from 13 percent to 32 percent between the 1960s and 2004. The prevalence of obesity and overweight has increased at an average rate of 0.3–0.8 percentage points across different sociodemographic groups over the past three decades. Some minority and low socioeconomic status groups — such as non-Hispanic black women and children, Mexican-American women and children, low socioeconomic status black men and white women and children, Native Americans and Pacific Islanders — are disproportionately affected..

The study authors included 20 journal papers, reports and online data sets in their meta-analysis. In addition, data from four national surveys —NHANES, BRFSS, Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance System and National Longitudinal Survey of Adolescent Health — were included in order to examine the disparities in obesity. They defined adult overweight and obesity using body mass index cutoffs of 25 and 30, respectively. Children at risk for overweight and overweight itself were classified as being in the 85th and 95th percentiles of body mass index, respectively. The key findings include:

The analysis showed patterns of obesity or overweight for various groups of Americans. All groups consistently increased in obesity or overweight prevalence, but the increase varied by group, making it a complex public health issue. More research needs to be completed to look into the underlying causes," says May A. Beydoun, coauthor of the study and a postdoctoral fellow in the Bloomberg School of Public Health's Department of International Health. "Obesity is likely to continue to increase, and if nothing is done, it will soon become the leading preventable cause of death in the United States." It's easy to be lulled into buying a reasonable looking cruller to go with coffee which contains 4500 calories and 15 grams of fat or buy a donut at a grocery containing 1500 calories.

And yet, in Cohasset, when we look at those running on our roads, or sunning themselves at the beaches or pass through the halls at school, or go to the supermarket, we see very little evidence of a problem for our town. Nevertheless, for a sane dieter, the grocery store's a minefield, a convenience store's a display of horrors and television's a constant siren song.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Web-based tool could help research

CSCR UPDATE

CHLOE KOINES

Using Sharepoint could enable CSCR students to make their costal research better known throughout the community.

Through the years, CSCR has become more and more technologically advanced. On Tuesday, Aug. 7, CSCR students and staff gathered at Fidelity Investments in Boston to discuss a program that could further increase the organization's efficiency and productivity. The meeting was hosted by Fidelity Management executive and School Committee member Mr. Steve Fusco, and his colleagues Mr. Josh Jones of Fidelity Management, and Damon Penny of the Microsoft Corporation. In attendance were staff members Mr. Jack Buckley, Dr. Ann Thomae, and Ms. Jackie Fitts, and students Jenny Cahill, John Choi, Robin Earle, Jessie Fitts, Aisling Guinee, and August Oddleifson.

Staff and students were provided with an overview of a potential web-based project management tool called Microsoft Sharepoint. Mr. Perry defined Sharepoint as a "collaborative web platform in which multiple users can post documents and notes, collaborate on projects, share data, and create reports" all from remote locations.

Using Sharepoint could enable CSCR students to make their costal research better known throughout the community. The program would also allow students on the South Shore to communicate with students overseas, exchanging data that could be useful in investigating the global climate change. Those in attendance were shown how to use Sharepoint for managing projects, including discussion bulletin boards, project libraries, interactive calendars, reminders, task assignments, training DVD clips, and email notification functions.

Students and staff were then told of the many choices one has in getting started with Sharepoint, such as utilizing a web-based host, using one's own server, security issues, backing up all files, data recovery, designing and editing, storage capacity, and software application compatibility. Some of Sharepoint's potential problems led to a discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of similar programs like Google "Apps."

Through this information session, students were placed in the forefront of CSCR's technological changes. Using Sharepoint could give CSCR the opportunity to spread research and findings throughout the community, even the world, changing a small research group into a global organization.

'I am not buying it!'

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JOANN MIRISE

fact, I had to catch myself before sliding down the slippery slope of again buying what I didn't need.

I have cheated twice. The first cheat was on an Ipod armband holder. I justified it as a health purchase. If I was more comfortable while running I would go farther and therefore be healthier. Yes, my mind got very creative on occasion during the past few months. The second cheat was a gift card for my sister's housewarming. Although I wasn't technically buying a thing, I knew the card would go on to become a thing. The guilt was palpable.

Gifts, in general, were the most difficult for me to navigate at first. Would I be judged for giving a used gift? A good solution has been choosing gift certificates for services or experiences like massages, movie passes or prepaid cards for the ice cream shop. Also, meaningful items to pass on like a cherished book or a bouquet from the garden have helped me to take gift giving to the depth it deserves.

Along with the two blatant cheats, there have been some grey areas. Namely books and some used items that were purchased in an effort to be more sustainable. I am likely one of the library's best customers, but still I have bought books. Most of the purchases are in the how-to genres of growing a vegetable garden or preserving food, and all are in the name of getting our family in the big league of sustainability. I haven't lost sleep over the grey areas.

And the hardest part so far? Because I did not add myself into the shoe exception, it's become clear that this is the biggest loss. I miss new shoes, and come fall, the boots. I am not proud of this discovery.

Like life in general, Not Buying It is a work in progress. It is not an exercise in nobility. Nor is it a practice of willpower. Like Al Gore said "If the crib's on fire, you don't speculate that the baby is flame-retardant. You take action." That's all I am doing. Day by day, month by month.

Frankly, I didn't tell anyone in the beginning because I wasn't sure if I would be able to make this shift for an entire year. I sold myself short. Not only am I going to make it through 2007, I might even consider going on for another year. Not Buying It is just that good.

JoAnn Mirise lives and writes in Cohasset. Stay tuned for the next installment of the Not Buying It project.

LIBRARY CORNER

Check out new titles at the library

New Titles – Learn something new this summer by listening to a Modern Scholar course offering. These educational kits, available for checkout, include a series of lectures on CDs and a course guide. New topics this month are "Waking the Dragon: Emerging Chinese economy and its impact on the world"; "The Dead Sea Scrolls: The truth behind the mystique"; "The People and the ballot: a history of American party politics"; and "The Odyssey of the West II: from Athens to Rome and the gospels". Modern Scholar courses are shelved in the CD audio book section of the library.

Library Book Group – There will be no August meeting of the Library Book Group. The next meeting will be at 10 a.m., on Wednesday, Sept. 26. The group will discuss Nathaniel Philbrick's book "Mayflower."

The Beckham question

It still remains to be seen what impact new star will have on soccer in US

COMMENTARY

MARK GOODMAN

By Major League Soccer (MLS) standards, the New England Revolution are a very good, championship contending team.

The Los Angeles Galaxy, meanwhile, are an exceptionally wretched outfit in most every way imaginable.

Both of these facts were on full display Sunday night in Foxboro, but of course, the Revolution's 1-0 victory took a back seat to the quasi-spectacle of David Beckham's first appearance at Gillette Stadium.

Only the first half profligacy of Taylor Twellman, who eventually scored the game's only goal in the second half, kept the match from finishing with a more deserved 3-0 score line, given the gulf of quality between the two sides. Amazingly, it was almost a 1-1 draw had it not been for the Galaxy's Landon Donovan completely bottling a point-blank chance in the closing minutes.

For New England, Steve Ralston was in typically excellent form, running tirelessly up and down the right flank and creating several scoring opportunities. Shalrie Joseph, the team's (and maybe the league's) best player, had another exemplary match in his holding midfield role.

The more than 35,000 fans in attendance provided a lively atmosphere, and there didn't seem to be too much tangible disappointment at the fact that Becks didn't take to the pitch because of his ankle injury. There were groups of fans here and there that left with 15 minutes remaining when it was apparent the Golden Boy wasn't going to play. And there was also the silly booing when the sight of Beckham sitting on the bench appeared on the Jumbotron with only minutes left to play.

Generals win battle of the shores

Outlaws miss another chance to taste victory

By David Wolcott
DWOLCOTT@CNC.COM

The difference between a football team having a perfect 4-0 record and carrying around a 1-3 mark isn't a large gap. A broken play here or a missed scoring opportunity there can do a lot to decide a particular game. Saturday night it was a missed field goal with time running out that brought the South Shore Outlaws down at the hands of the North Shore Generals, 7-5.

"We've been right there on the verge of winning every game, but each week something has popped up to keep us from winning the game," Outlaws general manager Ron Rezendes said. "The first week [10-7 loss to Whaling City] we missed a couple of scoring chances that could have put us on top and then the week after that we led the game deep into the fourth quarter before losing it on a fluke touchdown play in the last minute.

"Our record says that we are a 1-3 team, but we've played well enough to have a 4-0 record. We've been in every game right to the end, but it's just a matter of finding a way to get over that final hump."

9A's show their stuff

The Cohasset 9A baseball team had a great summer travel season. They started off slow but quickly learned how to compete against some very strong teams.

The players had to adjust to faster pitching, better hitters and base stealing. After a couple of tough losses and ties the team notched some solid wins and gained some confidence and momentum. Cohasset then beat Braintree, the undefeated first place team. They finished the season 3-5-2 and were seeded sixth in the playoffs.

The team had fun, played hard every game and their improved play will surely make them All-Stars next year.

Their first playoff game was against Scituate, the third seed. The Cohasset bats came alive and the team combined for 22 hits and the upset win. Every player at the game had two or more hits.

Next up was Braintree and Cohasset tried their best but couldn't pull off the upset twice against a very good team.

Cohasset pitchers Jake Burchill, Brett Dooley and Danny Axelson did an awesome job shutting down the best hitters in the league. Matt Montefusco and Davis Cronin were a force behind the plate throwing out runners.

The infielder of Bryce Church, AJ Kucinski, Justin Fein and Ryan McElhinney improved tremendously throughout the season and worked hard to be the best at their positions. Jack Chamberlain, Jack Donohue and Andrew Kuppens did a stellar job in the outfield fielding and holding runners from extra bases.

The team had fun, played hard every game and their improved play will surely make them All-Stars next year.

Cohasset's crazy 8's come up aces

Cohasset's 8-year old summer baseball team ended their season on Monday night after a victorious run in the playoffs to finish as division finalists.

Two of their three playoff victories were against number-one seed Weymouth and number-two seed Quincy: a remarkable finish to a spectacular season. After a great win against the strong arms of Stoughton, the boys in blue traveled to Quarry Hills for a bought with the kids from Quincy. It was a beautiful night for baseball at Quincy's scenic Little League complex with views of the Boston skyline. Cohasset shot out of the gate to log seven runs in the first few innings with hits from everywhere in the lineup.

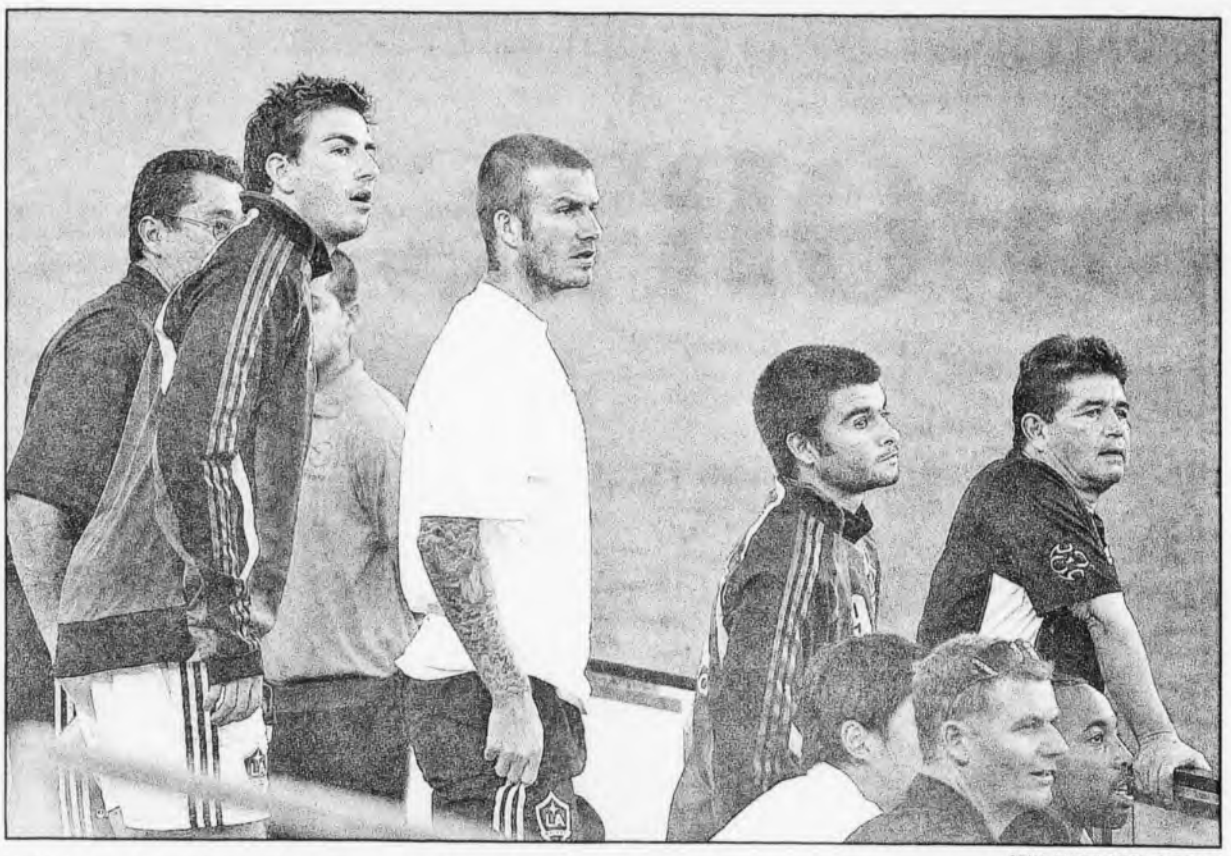
Timmy Chase had a great start on the mound against Quincy to only allow one run in two innings pitched. Joe Cavanaro tossed two shutout innings, and Mr. Clutch, Taggart Eymer rolled in to close it out with his "Cricket Catapult Curve." With the bases loaded and one in the bottom of the sixth and Quincy rallying, Taggart loaded his weapon and struck out the first two batters he saw and escorted his boys to the third round of the playoffs.

This game featured some great hitting by Charlie Krumsiek and Joe Campadelli, excellent at-bats by Michael Tesauro, Luke Norton and Charlie Dubiel, and some absolutely spectacular fielding that included two throw-outs at home with remarkable catches by Michael "Tag-'em Tight" Tesauro behind the plate and wonderful force-outs by Liam O'Connell at second. All around, it was a great defensive performance that delivered some seasoned, heads-up baseball.

Round three saw a sunny Saturday morning drive to Gil Starkey Field on the shores of the Weymouth Reservoir to face the Weymouth South first place championship team that earned two byes in the playoffs. This matchup was reminiscent of the Stoughton nail-biter.

It was 1-0 in the top of the sixth after some great pitching by Timmy Chase, Taggart Eymer (more gutsy relief work), and Ben Rice. But it all happened with two outs, full count, season in the balance, and Liam O'Connell refused to be that last batter of the season. It was one foul ball after another before his center field two-base blast kept his team alive.

Ben Rice picked up the baton and took the signal from Dad (via Grandpa's cell phone): "Take this one deep boy and don't stop running until someone waves a glove with a ball in it at you." What came next was a cruise missile to the fence to bring home Liam for the tying run and leave himself on third for a clutch triple.



Timmy Chase would round it out with a third drive to center for a fortunate bounce out of the centerfielder's glove to drive in the go-ahead run. Rice would finish it off with some nasty pitches to close it out to extend this teams' run for one more show.

On to Braintree's Watson Park for the division Final Four. Cohasset faced Kingston in the South division finals against a team that Cohasset topped to win the 2007 Pembroke Invitational, which the kids from Kingston had yet to forget.

The first two innings featured lots of fireworks from the boys in red. Kingston picked up the ball early to go ahead 8-2, but Cohasset never laid down. The boys in blue battled for the remainder of the contest with great pitching to shut out Kingston for three innings and put runners of their own in scoring position all night.

But the early deficit was too much to overcome. However, these boys left the field with heads held high after advancing deep in the playoffs to finish as one of the top eight teams out of 50 in the league. It was a terrific accomplishment for these boys and their dedicated coaches.

Congratulations to Will Broderick, Owen Burchill, Joe Campadelli, Joe Cavanaro, Timmy Chase, Charlie Dubiel, Taggart Eymer, Charlie Krumsiek, Cole Joslin, Luke Norton, Liam O'Connell, Ben Rice, Michael Tesauro and Coaches Rich Burchill and Dan Rice.

David Beckham (center) cast a lonely figure on the Galaxy bench Sunday night. Beckham didn't play and his team went on to lose 1-0 to the Revolution.

The Beckham question

Say what you will about the man and the frenzy surrounding him, but Beckham has a passion for the game and I believe he would have given anything to be able to play Sunday night.

It would be foolish to think that one match – where the star of the night didn't even play – is all of a sudden going to have fans coming out in droves for Revolution games. But, let's make a reasonable assumption that crowds will improve incrementally for the rest of the season, and the average attendance of roughly 14,500 becomes 18,000.

Will those fans be compelled to stay? And will the fan base grow from there?

Even if Beckham had played, I'm not sure what effect it would have had on people's perception and/or appreciation for the sport. Call me a cynical soccer snob – because I am – but I don't think the average American sports fan who doesn't watch the game will appreciate Beckham's crossing ability or 50-yard through balls unless they directly result in goals.

Beckham is not the kind of Pele-like player who will beat six defenders on the dribble and score. The people who say soccer is "too slow" or "like watching paint dry" will still not be interested and return their interests to interminably slower sports like baseball and golf.

How many of the newbies on hand for their first ever soccer game Sunday night will truly appreciate what Joseph brings to the field? The positioning, defending, and solid passing to players in open space don't make the highlight reels like, say, a Beckham free kick.

What Joseph is still doing in MLS is a mystery to me, as there is no doubt he could play in England or Spain. This speaks to a major problem plaguing the league, and one that Beckham alone will not fix: keeping its best players.

The likes of Clint Dempsey and Freddy Adu view MLS as a mere steppingstone to playing in Europe. And for every Dempsey and Adu, there are several more American players kicking around the Norwegian or Danish leagues, or the German third division. Surely those players can add to the quality of play in MLS, which, to the league's credit, has improved noticeably over the last several years.

But it hasn't done so enough for the interest (i.e. fan attendance) to take the next step. Beckham will sell out stadiums in Toronto, Washington, Foxboro, Dallas, etc. How many of those fans, however, will come back when the Columbus Crew are in town?

My best guess is not many, until the league is able to retain the talented players that may be catching a new fan's eye when it's not following Beckham's every move. For instance, a player like Andy Dorman, who makes $25,000 a year, which isn't even the league minimum.

Even when he is playing, there is only so much Beckham can do by himself in terms of improving the sport's standing in the American athletic landscape. The league would be well served to take whatever extra money it is making from Becks' arrival and put it toward improving player salaries to entice some of them to stay.

To be sure, some players will leave anyway, with the allure of playing in Europe too strong to ignore. But there is no reason that the Andy Dormans of the league, the players that become cult heroes and can potentially attract new fans, shouldn't be attracted to stay in MLS.

Only when that issue is addressed, and when we see attendance for your average MLS game increase, will we begin to know what kind of impact Beckham's arrival to the U.S. has had.

Outlaws safety Mike Leoncello (28) returns an interception for a touchdown during the Aug. 4 win over the Southern New England Rage.

The high-powered passing game of the Generals provided a stiff test to an Outlaws defenoe, which entered the contest only allowing a couple of touchdowns each game on average this season. With three strong targets at wide receiver to choose from, North Shore moved the ball quickly down the field before finally punching home a short touchdown run to take a 7-0 first quarter lead.

The Outlaws remained a touchdown behind heading toward the half before a trick play put them in scoring range. Lined up in punt formation, the snap instead went to upback Brian Rezendes who carried the ball 20 yards for an Outlaws first down. The play seemed to give South Shore a spark it had been lacking. John Carpenter's 36-yard field goal just before the half put them on the scoreboard, 7-3.

"I feel bad for the guys that we've not had the chance to be more successful than we have. We're close to breaking through and getting on the winning side of things."

Outlaws GM/owner
Ron Rezendes

"As the game went along it really became a defensive battle," Rezendes said. "They got that opening touchdown on us, but after that we did a great job of pinning them deep in their own end of the field. The defense and special teams have been doing a great job for us all season."

The work of the defense paid off on the scoreboard in the third quarter when a high snap went through the end zone for a safety, bringing the Outlaws a step closer, 7-5.

As it's been all season with the Outlaws, the game would stay in doubt until the final whistle. They drove deep into North Shore's end of the field late in the game, but Carpenter's field goal try with less than a minute left sailed wide of the intended mark.

"We've been as good as all of the teams we've played thus far," Rezendes said. "I feel bad for the guys that we've not had the chance to be more successful than we have. We're close to breaking through and getting on the winning side of things."

The Outlaws are on the road once again this weekend. They'll travel to the New Hampshire border Saturday night at 7 p.m. to face the North East Knights.

Fourth-graders dress up stuffed animals

frenzy yet, right now it is enjoying immense popularity among kids. The cuddly stuffed animals come in two different sizes and each is equipped with a secret code, unique to the toy. The owner can then go online to www.webkinz.com and interact with their Webkinz online. The toy is a sign of a more computer literate generation.

With the encouragement of their parents the girls have started their very own business—Klothes-Kins. In what is a fun activity for the girls to do with their summer, the parents see it as an opportunity to learn about running a business, "it's a learning curve," says Grace's mother, Mary McMeekin.

The girls have seen their product through several stages and have hashed out details over business meetings and power lunches. First, they designed and bought fabric and yarn for the clothes. They utilized their third grade math skills to figure out how much fabric they needed for the product. Next, they hired a professional seamstress to build the product for them. Lastly, they discussed the financial end of the business—how they would split up the profit and reinvest in the business.

One of the more important decisions was deciding to donate a portion of their profit to Children's Hospital in Boston. Stuffed animals are often used to comfort children when they are sick or sad, so they figured with their business, the donation would be appropriate. Fifty cents from every Klothes-Kins sold will go to Children's Hospital.

The final products are finished looking accessories any stuffed animal, Webkinz or not, would be proud to wear. The ponchos are reversible, adorned with pom-poms and ruffles, while the sweaters sport pins and patches. Karlee designed a sweater with a large 'U' on the front to go specifically with the beagle Webkinz as a tribute to the new movie (and old cartoon) "Underdog."

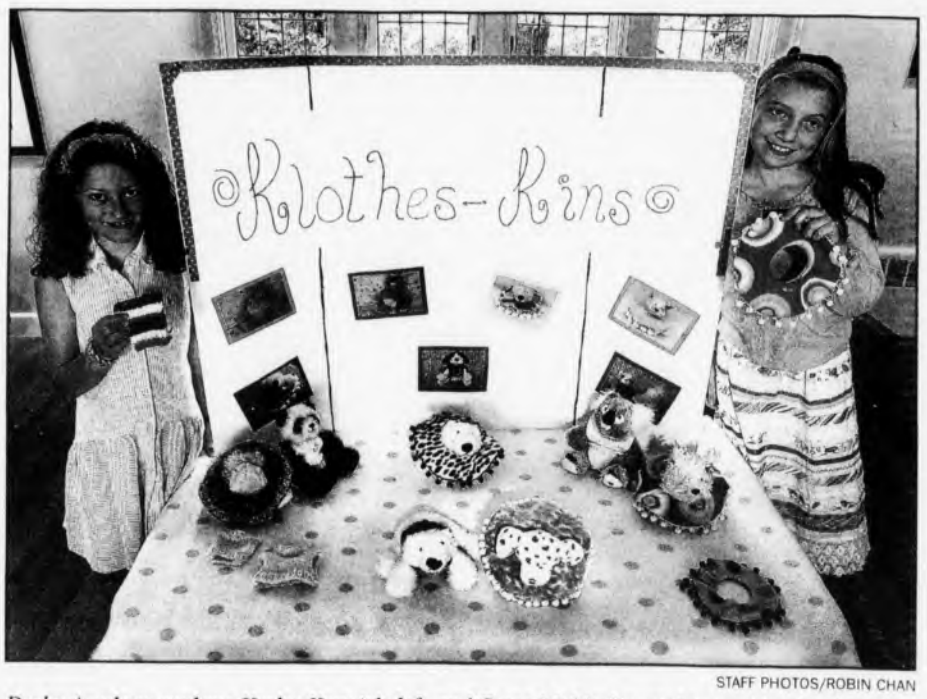
The girls each have about a dozen Webkinz to model their fashions. Both name the koala as one of their favorites. Although for Grace her panda Webkinz runs a close second.

Each decision the girls made for the business was well vetted between the two of them, a sign of good friendship and a great business relationship.

"They really worked together as a team, with each decision they worked out their differences," attests Beverly Koswick, Karlee's mother.

"They were stars in that department," says McMeekin. The girls agree they make a good team.

Deciding on the business name took some time and debate. The started with Kins Klothes, changed to Klothes Kin, then later added the 's' to make the catchy Klothes Kins. The business savvy girls recognize the trademarks held by Ganz, the creator of Webkinz, and have been careful not to infringe on them.



As a team, they each enjoy different parts of the business. Grace names her favorite part as going to the fabric store to pick out the materials for the Klothes-Kins. Karlee finds herself in her element behind their booth at the Farmer's Market selling their product.

In their first afternoon at the Farmer's Market they sold over 20 pieces, evenly split between hand knit sweaters and whimsical fleece ponchos. In addition, they have been selling them to friends and family every chance they get.

The mothers of the two girls believe Karlee and Grace's efforts will stretch far beyond Webkinz popularity. McMeekin hopes to instill in the girls the notion a job doesn't have to be something you have to do, rather something you want to do and love to do. Both McMeekin and her husband, Bruce, own their own businesses. The girls have been entrepreneurs on other occasions by setting up lemonade stands and making crafts to sell to friends and family.

Klothes Kins will eventually have a complete website, designed by Karlee and Grace. The parents plan on teaching the girls how to design their own website, just another practical skill they will gain from this project. Some information is posted on the website already.

If interested in Klothes Kins, visit their website www.klothes-kins.com or visit them at the Farmer's Market, Thursdays 2:30-6:30p.m.

Tradd finds niche at Board of Health

excited about the Adopt-a-street clean up program.

But that's not all she does, Tradd also serves as the town's food inspector (she's ServSafe certified.) and makes twice annual random checks of restaurants, supermarkets and convenience stores —"any place that sells food to the public"— to ensure they are up to health standards. If any complaints are made with the Board of Health, Tradd follows up with a visit to the site.

Cohasset's Board of Health works together with other area communities to ensure each municipality will have the help they need if there is an emergency. Tradd and Godzik meet monthly with representatives from 27 other towns that make up our regional preparedness group, region 4B. Throughout the year, the Board of Health meets monthly to discuss public health issues facing the communities. In the event of an emergency, the other communities would provide aid to Cohasset and vice versa.

"Public health is huge," she says her office receives an abundance of information everyday and it's her job to evaluate it and decide if it is relevant to the residents of Cohasset, "every community is unique, what affects one community might not affect another."

The summer is the time of the year where residents spend most of their time outdoors, so likewise the Board of Health has to make sure the outdoors is safe as can be for all, "this is our season to be out in the field," says Tradd.

Ensuring a safe beach and swimming experience is at the top of her list. Each Tuesday morning, Tradd heads out to the town's six swimming areas to collect water samples for testing. This year she has teamed up the three high school students of the Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) to take the samples. Tradd sends her samples to the state contracted lab, G&L Laboratories in Quincy, while the students test their own samples using a different method then they compare the results. Tradd and the students walk the beach and make observations to see if anything environmental is going on. The entire process takes about an hour and a half.

All year long, she heads out to monitor septic construction or to perform perc testing. She is a licensed soil evaluator. During the winter, she is busy going to training workshops and continuing education programs. They close out the season with an annual report and look ahead for new projects to tackle. Drafting regulations for massage therapists is already on her list.

Health Inspector Tara Tradd holds up a card that identifies dog and deer ticks. Deer ticks, which are vectors for Lyme disease, are a threat year-round. People can pickup the ID cards at the Board of Health office at Town Hall.

With summer ending and school beginning in just a few weeks, Tradd is already looking ahead to back to school inspections. She walks through all the schools to make sure the classrooms and hallways are clean. She inspects the bathrooms to make sure everything is in working order and there is ample toilet paper, soap and paper towels. It takes her about two days to inspect the Middle-High School. Then, she goes back to each school to take a look at the cafeterias.

Tradd does whatever she can to ensure the safety and health of Cohasset residents. She's ready to address any concern with a quick smile to put anyone at ease.

"She's our hidden treasure in the back of the building," says public health nurse Judy Fitzsimmons, "we couldn't do without her."

Tradd can be reached at the Board of Health office at 781-383-4116 or by e-mail tarat@townofcohasset.org.

OBITUARIES

Bettie Gaston

Former Cohasset resident

Bettie Roper Gaston, 92, died Aug. 13, 2007.

Bettie grew up in Petersburg, Va., the youngest daughter of Paul and Jessie Edwards Roper. She attended Bryn Mawr College and the Philadelphia School of Music and became an accomplished pianist.

Bettie married John M. Gaston Jr. in 1941, and after the end of World War II, they made their home in Princeton, N.J., where they lived for 30 years and raised two children.

Bettie Gaston was a member of the Princeton Community Players, the Present Day Club, the Coral Beach and Tennis Club and was a dedicated volunteer for the Princeton Hospital.

After Mr. Gaston's retirement in 1965, they moved to Weybridge, Surrey, England. Upon Mr. Gaston's death in 1986, Bettie Gaston moved to Cohasset, where she lived for 19 years before moving back to the place of her birth, Petersburg, Va.

She leaves her daughter, Harriet, her son, John, six grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

A graveside service will be held at 10 a.m. Friday, Aug. 17, at Blandford Cemetery with the Rev. Boston M. Lackey, Jr., Rector Emeritus of Christ and Grace Episcopal Church, officiating.

Donations in her name may be made to the Petersburg Home for Ladies, 311 S Jefferson St, Petersburg, VA 23803. Condolences may be registered at www.jtmorriss.com.

Donald F. Hines

Retired certified public accountant

Donald F. Hines, 76, of Cohasset, died Aug. 5, 2007.

The son of the late Arthur J. and Catherine S. (Campbell) Hines of Abington, he was a graduate of Commerce High School and Boston College.

Mr. Hines was employed as a certified public accountant for Deloitte & Touche, LLP in Boston before retiring in December of 1995.

He leaves his wife, Margaret B. (Lewis) Hines; his children, Donna F. Gontarz and her husband Robert of Cohasset, Francine A Searles and her husband George of Dennis; and Kathryn E. Hines of Cohasset; his grandchildren, Amanda and Caitlin Gontarz of Cohasset and Michael, Jennifer and Megan Searles of Dennis; two brothers, Arthur Hines of Whitman, Thomas Hines of Florida, formerly of Abington; a sister Patricia Little of Abington.

He was the father of the late Margaret Mary and Donald Lewis Hines and the brother of the late James and Paul Hines and Eleanor Colie and Catherine Mandanici. He also leaves many nieces and nephews.

A Mass of Christian burial was held Aug. 9, in St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Interment was private.

Expressions of sympathy may be made in his name to the Head and Neck Clinic of the Dana Faber Cancer Institute, 44 Binney St, Boston, MA 02115.

Arrangements were handled by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset.

Indigo Girls mix music and politics

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Twenty years after they released their first album as the Indigo Girls, Amy Ray and Emily Saliers remain active musically and politically. Their longtime support for gay rights and environmental issues doesn't translate to Presidential politics, however, even during an election season.

"We don't campaign for candidates, just issues," explained Amy Ray by telephone last week from her home outside Atlanta. "There are precious few political people whom we believe in, like Jimmy Carter, but very few of whom we believe in enough to work for and support. That could change this time around, but it probably won't. We prefer to get directly involved with the issues that are key to 'Honor the Earth,' the organization Emily and I developed to create awareness and support for native environmental issues, including the need for renewable energy, through indigenous activism. Those are our issues. And, right now, we're also raising money for 'Sweet Home New Orleans' which is working to revitalize the cultural and music communities affected by the aftermath Hurricane Katrina."

While their activism continues to evolve, so does their music. The contemporary folk duo released their 10th studio album, "Despite Our Differences," just a year ago and will make their South Shore Music Circus debut next Friday in support of it. The first of a five-record deal on their new label, Hollywood Records, the new album is produced by Mitchell Froom (Paul McCartney, Elvis Costello, Sheryl Crow) and was recorded at Froom's Los Angeles studio.

"We had been wanting to work with Mitchell for a few years. He really makes his mark on things. He sat down with us and really paid attention to the way we built our harmonies and chord structures. With Mitchell, we really wanted his advice and we took it because we trusted him as a great writer, pianist, composer, and record producer. He taught us things about chord structure that we didn't know and also about chord voices. We recorded with a group of musicians that have colossal talent. To top it all off, Pink and Brandi Carlile lent us their deep and textured voices for a couple of songs. The songs are as different as they can be, but the Indigo connection is there."

That connection can be traced to a Georgia elementary school, where Ray and Saliers first met as young girls. While in high school, the pair started performing together as the B-Band and Saliers and Ray. By 1985, they had renamed themselves Indigo Girls. After recording on independent labels, Epic Records signed Indigo Girls and released their first self-titled album in 1989. It went double platinum and won the 1990 Grammy Award for Best Folk Recording. Their subsequent albums, including 1991's "Nomads Indians Saints," 1992's "Rites of Passage," and later "Swamp Ophelia" also scored well on the Billboard charts. Both songwriters, Ray and Saliers record only their own music.

The Indigo Girls, Emily Saliers and Amy Ray.

While their activism continues to evolve, so does their music. The contemporary folk duo released their 10th studio album, "Despite Our Differences," just a year ago and will make their South Shore Music Circus debut next Friday in support of it.

"Emily and I write all the Indigo Girls songs," explains Ray of the process the pair undertakes when selecting the music for a new album. "We write in our own time, separately, and then we come together alone and share each of the songs we've written that we like the best. For the latest album, we brought about 14 songs to Mitchell and then we went back and forth. He would send us suggestions and we would incorporate them into the songs. 'Little Perennials' and 'Pendulum Swingers' are really reflective of Mitchell. From a social justice perspective, I'm really pleased with the way 'Rock 'n Roll Heaven's Gate' turned out. It is a feminist rock anthem about how hard the business can be for women."

Ray understands that point not just from the Indigo Girls perspective, but also from her own solo career. She is founder and owner of the Indie label, Damon Records, which is home to Justin Hale, Rose Polenzani, and Athens Boys Choir among other artists. Ray has also put out three solo albums, "Stag," "Prom," and "Live from Knoxville."

"My solo stuff is more like punk rock. It is completely separate from Indigo Girls. I'm still finding my way as a solo artist, but I know I need to do both things. Some of our fans cross over, but it is pretty loud so not all of them like what they hear."

Ray says loyal Indigo Girls fans have nothing to fear from the work she does without Saliers.

"There is no one I trust, on stage or in a recording studio, as much as Emily. She is the one for me musically. We look back sometimes and say this is crazy, how can we still be together and still doing this? Neither one of us is just totally ambitious except when it comes to music and creativity. Otherwise, we have always had solid, small, achievable goals."

And allies in the business willing to share sound advice.

"We have friends like Joan Baez and Bonnie Raitt who told us that fame would wax and wane so we've been ready for whatever has come our way. We never say, we need to do this or that differently, but we're also careful not to stagnate. It is something we've known was important since we we were kids. Every so often, I remind myself that we've been together for such a long time and that we're lucky to still be together."

Indigo Girls will at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on Aug. 24. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org.

Falling 'Stardust'

Falling 'Stardust'

"Stardust" (C+)
By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

Toto, I don't think we're in Narnia anymore. "Stardust," a film adaptation of a novel by Neil Gaiman, is this week's "Chronicles of Narnia" knockoff. Warning: More are coming.

But this early effort merely proves that you may have all the ingredients in place: a magical kingdom, evil witches, flying pirates, dueling goblins, a dying king (Peter O'Toole), villainous princes, a magical heroine and still lack magic.

The action transpires in both the unconvincingly Victorian village of Wall and the neighboring magical kingdom of Stormhold (the cutesy-wootsiness of the names does not auger well).

Tristan Thorne — I rest my case — (a rather bland Charlie Cox) is a young villager who makes a crazy promise to a rather shallow village beauty Victoria (munchkinesque Sienna Miller) that he will bring her back a fallen star (if you find this sort of thing narcolepsy-inducing, you may stop reading now).

The "star" turns out to be Yvaine (Claire Danes), a young woman in celestial blue raiment, who has been injured by her fall from the heavens. I believe you will find a star named Yvaine falls mainly in the plain (I also got a kick out of the Latin names of the King's seven sons, starting with Primus).

The cast mixes Americans and Brits. Robert De Niro supplies comic relief, and I mean relief, as the closeted, cross-dressing, pirate Captain Shakespeare (I have read you and Shakespeare, Gaiman, and you are no Bard). The great O'Toole is almost entirely wasted as the wasting king. As a Circe-like witched aiming to cut out the heroine's heart (hmm, this sounds familiar), Michelle Pfeiffer is persuasive, if not particularly fun. Ricky Gervais has a moment or two as Ferdy the Fence.

But a "Titanic" reference lands with a thud, and any resemblance to "The Princess Bride" is purely accidental. I suppose if you're a sucker for a film that ends with a coronation, you may not mind how weirdly boring "Stardust" is.

Directed by Matthew Vaughn, whose debut feature "Layer Cake" was a stylish bit of puff pastry (and who is in talks to helm the Norse meat pie "Thor"), and scripted by Vaughn and Jane Goldman, "Stardust" hasn't enough sparkle. The almost completely ignored, visually groundbreaking 2005 Gaiman adaptation "MirrorMask" was vastly superior to this piffle.

Rated PG-13. "Stardust" contains fantasy-film violence and risqué humor.

New Releases

"THIS IS ENGLAND" (A)

With punk-fueled whiplash rhythm, an ingratiating central character and an eye-opening story, Shane Meadows' superb "This is England" is an autobiographical look back at his skinhead youth. Twelve-year-old Shaun comes under the influence of a local gang of skinheads who adopt him as their mascot and give him not just a new look, but protection and a sense of family. The skinheads here are not the neo-Nazis of reputation, but an anarchic, interracial gang who delight in trashing an abandoned housing project, getting stoned and listening to West Indian music. (Not Rated) — Stephen Schaeffer

Wilbur (Christopher Walken) and Edna (John Travolta) trip the light fantastic in "Hairspray."

"NO END IN SIGHT" (A-)

Written, directed and produced by Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduate and senior fellow at the Brookings Institution Charges Ferguson, the film is an even-handed review of the mistakes, if not deceptions, that led us to the point where we find ourselves in Iraq — in a quagmire that we perhaps cannot get out of without further catastrophe. How did we get here? "No End in Sight" argues we have nowhere to look but at Bush's White House. (Not Rated)

Ongoing

"HAIRSPRAY" (B+)

How much you love "Hairspray," Adam Shankman's goofily entertaining screen version of the Tony Award-winning Broadway musical, may depend upon how you react to John Travolta in a fat suit and how much you miss the semi-classic "Bye Bye Birdie." A musical version of John Waters' 1988 surprise non-musical hit, this new "Hairspray" also features a delightful debut performance by former ice-cream scooper Nikki Blonsky as Tracy Turnblad. Move over Ugly Betty, it's Tracy's turn to rock. This "Hairspray" may lack the trademark polymorphous perversity of Waters' 1988 original, which featured drag queen Divine as Edna. But I suppose that was the whole point. (Rated PG)

"12:08 EAST OF BUCHAREST" (A-)

It's the anniversary of the 1989 "revolution" ousting Communist dictator Nikolae Ceausescu in Romania. But was there a genuine revolution or did some Romanians merely crawl out from under their rocks only after they had heard Ceausescu had fled in the night in his chopper? This is the question no-budget, talk-show host Virgil Jderescu (Teodor Corban) wants answered, and the answers he gets offer an amusingly Kafkaesque glimpse into Eastern European politics. (Not Rated)

"ARCTIC TALE" (B-)

The live-action "Arctic Tale" gives us a newborn polar bear and a walrus cub instead of penguins, Queen Latifah instead of Morgan Freeman and Harvard graduate Kristin Gore among the writers. This perhaps explains why "Arctic Tale" comes across as "An Inconvenient Truth for Polar Bears and Walruses." Melting ice and earlier and hotter summers have wreaked havoc with the "ancient rhythm of the seasons." But do we really need a symphony of walrus farts? Just in case you don't get the message, stick around for the final credits to hear overly made-up and coiffed children tell you, "Stop global warming." Oh, shut up. (Rated G)

"THE BOURNE ULTIMATUM" (A)

"Casino Royale" upped the ante and "The Bourne Ultimatum" ups it right back. Jason Bourne (Matt Damon), the James Bond of the post-9/11 era, is back, and he's still being hunted. By whom and for what reason hardly needs to be explained in these ultraviolent, paranoid times. They're after us; that's the only thing we know for sure. Distinguishing hunter from hunted is the brain-teasing conceit of the "Bourne Identity" films. Damon and the rest of the cast are all first-rate. "The Bourne Ultimatum" is finally a damning vision of a rogue U.S. government that believes the 9/11 attacks have given it license to surveil, "rendition," torture and kill anyone it likes. Have a bail watching Jason Bourne revoke it. (Rated PG-13)

"DR. BRONNER'S MAGIC SOAPBOX" (B)

A breezy documentary on a true American eccentric. Emil Bronner (1908-1997) was a German-Jewish emigre and self-anointed "doctor" who used his all-purpose liquid soap to spread his philosophy — to live the "Moral ABCs" of his "All-One-God-Faith." Today, Dr. Bronner's organic Castile soap is celebrated as an icon of '60s counterculture. (Not Rated) — Stephen Schaefer

Tom Gruber looks over the Cohasset Village Business District Study during a Saturday morning workshop at Town Hall.

More retail for the Village

Market analysis positive for retail future

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

One of the primary objectives at the end of the Village consulting project is to provide the framework for a viable business community. The market analysis of the area shows there is room in the local market for more businesses to open up shop in the Village Business District.

The data compiled by FXM Associates indicates the Village is currently not capturing a full share of the area sales. Frank Mahady of FXM Associates explained at Saturday's Village workshop there is a substantial gap between sales in the district and the area's household expenditures within a 15-mile drive time. The gap could translate into retail opportunity, if the right kind of retail was brought into the district.

In 2006, retail establishments were the highest percentage of businesses in the Village Business District with an estimated 30 retail stores and nearly 240 jobs and $19 million in annual sales. The village retail constitutes 28 percent of town-wide retail stores, but only 19 percent in retail sales, according to the 17-page memo distributed at the meeting. Mahady attributes the smaller percentage of retail sales to the prevalence of small business retailers in the Village.

However, in comparison to other established downtowns, which have lost retail activity to strip malls and

Mixing it up

Village consultants get down to business

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

If done right, the Village can handle more stores, more apartments, more open space and more parking, according to a team of consultants.

With a backdrop of a new streetscape, the Village consultants are paving the way for a downtown center to rival any on the South Shore. A mix of merchants, property owners, town officials and interested citizens — about 40 in all — came to the Town Hall auditorium Saturday morning armed with ideas and plans for the Village.

Although at one point architect Peter Martin described the current state of the village as having a "feel of the wild west," all present were hopeful the district could become the quintessential (and economically vital) New England village it's meant to be.

"We've taken a deeper dive frankly than has been done in the past," said Planning Board member Mike Westcott. "But it's not just about just collecting data, it's about what can be done while maintaining the character of the village. The consultants have a whole bunch of ideas, none of which are etched in stone... we're here to listen."

Basking in 'Becky's Baskets'

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

One man's trash is another man's treasure, or so the old adage goes, but does it hold true for another man's wastepaper basket?

For John Connell and the Historical Society the answer is yes. The interest is not in a standard wastepaper basket, rather in baskets handmade in Cohasset by longtime resident Rebecca Downs Hock.

The baskets gained a renewed focus for Connell once he walked into the Historical Society's exhibit "Tying the Knot: 100 Years of Cohasset Weddings" last summer on a whim.

"I didn't really have any interest in wedding gowns, but I thought I would go over and take a peek," he says. Connell is on the Historical Society's Board of Directors and a regular volunteer. When he walked into the exhibit he saw out of the corner of his eye one of "Becky's Baskets."

"My eye was drawn to it automatically," Connell says. He walked right over and felt the very top of the wastepaper basket, what he says is the only surefire way to know it's a true Becky's Basket. The top of the basket is shaped by pieces of coat hangers covered in cloth. He confirmed his suspicion and looked at the information card for the basket. Upon closer inspection Connell found the basket to be improperly marked "made by Mary Fleming." He immediately told the exhibit coordinators and Mary Hartshorne, the donor of basket, of the mistake.

Hartshorne received the wastebasket as a wedding present; it is decorated with a picture of a little girl on one side and her wedding invitation on the other. For years, the baskets were sold at Fleming's in the Village and Hartshorne always assumed it was Mary Fleming who made the baskets.

Judy Sestito of Cohasset holds a basket that she made herself after being taught by Rebecca "Becky" Hock. Sestito learned how to make the baskets in the fall of 1955. "Becky's Baskets" are being displayed at the Cohasset Historical Society.

Testing the waters

For the better part of a year, the Stormwater Committee has been working toward drafting a bylaw to remediate and control stormwater issues plaguing many parts of Cohasset.

A bylaw was brought to annual Town Meeting in the spring, but failed to get broad-based public or town official support and the article was indefinitely postponed. The committee re-grouped following Town Meeting and is gearing up to present a much different bylaw at the November Town Meeting.

Members of the Stormwater Committee presented their draft bylaw to the planning board on Wednesday night seeking input and direction. In the current draft of the stormwater management bylaw, the planning board will be the primary stormwater permitting authority.

"We need to prevent issues from getting worse and remediate current issues throughout town," said Stormwater Committee Chairman Marty Nee. The persistent problems are not the only driver; a town

More bike accidents at North Main Street

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Another bicycle accident occurred involving two cyclists at the North Main Street grade crossing. The bicycle wheels of one male and one female got trapped in the angled tracks on Sunday about 6:30 p.m. The female rider was treated by the Cohasset Fire Department on the scene for road rash and minor cuts and scrapes. The male rider, who was complaining of back and neck pain, was taken to South Shore Hospital by ambulance. A third bicyclist, a female, traveling northbound with them, crossed the tracks without incident. The police received three 911 calls regarding the incident.

The Greenbush liaisons, Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan, are still in talks with the MBTA about this crossing.

"We need to do something sooner rather than later," said Sergeant William Quigley.

This was the fifth time the fire department has responded to an injured bicyclist from the North Main Street crossing since August 2006.

Car fire

A driver traveling near the intersection of Beechwood Street and Ox Pasture noticed smoke coming from his car and immediately pulled over on Monday (Aug. 20) morning. The male driver told police he saw smoke and burning plastic falling from the dashboard in the car into the passenger compartment. Once on the side of the road, he got out of the car.

By the time the fire department responded to the scene the car was completely involved. Firefighters extinguished the flame in about 15 to 20 minutes and remained on the scene for 45 minutes. The car was a total loss. With the amount of damage to the car fire officials were not able to determine a definitive cause of the fire.

Well being check

When a resident on Rustic Ave. noticed newspapers piling up in her neighbor's driveway, she called the police last Monday morning to perform a well being check on the residence. A patrol officer went to the house and confirmed there was no one home and reported there was work being done on the house.

Sgt. Quigley advised if people are going away for a week or will not be around the house they should stop by the police station to fill out a vacant house form. The form will cause patrol officers to check on the residence while vacant. Letting your immediate neighbors know of vacation plans so they can keep an eye on the house is a good idea as well, he said.

"Make sure to stop newspaper delivery and mail. If mail is piling up it is a tell tale sign no one is around and it's inviting someone to break in," said Quigley.

Bat in living room

Two bats were found flying in a resident's living room. Two adults were exposed to the animals. Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy was able to capture one of the bats; the other escaped from the house. The captured bat was sent to the state lab in Jamaica Plain for rabies testing. The test came back negative. Although neither resident was bitten, they were advised to see their primary care physician.

Warrant arrests

The Cohasset Police made three warrant arrests last week.

Last Monday (Aug. 13) at around 6:30 p.m., a patrol officer on Route 3A near Pond Street stopped a 1994 Ford Bronco operated by 35-year-old male from Hingham for two violations. The car had an expired inspection sticker and no brake lights. A routine computer check on the operator revealed an outstanding arrest warrant out of Quincy district court for larceny. The man was arrested and the vehicle was towed. He was brought to the station where he was booked and bailed with a date to return to Quincy District Court on Tuesday morning.

A patrol officer saw a white Ford pick-up truck parked in a no parking zone at the end of Beechwood Street at about 1 a.m on Wednesday morning (Aug. 15). The officer got out to speak with the individuals in the car, a male and a female. Through a conversation the officer identified the occupants and ran computer checks on each of them. It turned out the 30-year-old female from Marshfield had an outstanding warrant for her arrest out of the Plymouth District Court. She was arrested, booked and bailed later that morning. The warrant was for payment default stemming from an incident in Hanson.

A 62-year-old male from Scituate was arrested on two outstanding probation violation warrants. The male was calling his probation officer to argue his case from a pay phone in Tedeschi Plaza on Thursday (Aug. 16) around noon. The probation officer was able to get the man's location from caller ID and requested the Cohasset police to pick him up. He was arrested and immediately brought to Quincy District Court.

Motorcycle accident

A 22-year-old male from Cohasset driving a 2007 Honda motorcycle on Jerusalem Road did not prepare for a hairpin turn and lost control of the his bike, according to police. When police arrived on the scene the rider was up and walking around and refused to be taken to the hospital.

The motorcycle was damaged in the accident and had to be towed from the scene. However, the registration of the motorcycle is in question. It has out of state plates and the owner is a resident of Massachusetts. According to state law, a vehicle must be registered in Massachusetts if it is in the state for 30 days or more out of year. The owner of the bike will have to show proper insurance and license before he can get his motorcycle back.

Beehive in reservoir

A traffic detail officer at the end of Aaron River Road had a clear view of the reservoir where he observed a group of teenagers throwing something into the water. A police car was dispatched to the location where the officer met up with three Cohasset males, two 15-year-olds and one 16-year-old. Apparently, the boys were attempting to dispose of a large beehive. They had lit the hive on fire and tossed it into the reservoir. The officer took down the names of the boys and told them their actions were likely not the best of ideas. None of the boys reported being stung.

Rising blood pressure

A person walked into the fire station on Elm Street and requested to have their blood pressure checked around 6:30 a.m. Tuesday (Aug. 18). The medic determined the party should seek emergency care and transported him via ambulance to South Shore Hospital.

Fire Chief Robert Silvia said walk-ins to the fire headquarters are common. People walking by the station often stop in for a blood pressure check or minor medical problems. On occasion, he said people come to the station with difficulty breathing or showing symptoms of a heart attack. A medic evaluates the patient and offers advice, or if the problem is deemed serious, they are taken to the hospital.

"The fire station is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, the doctor's office isn't," Silvia said. "It's just one of the services we provide."

Wires down

A caller reported wires down on Jerusalem Road Drive on Tuesday (Aug. 14) around 2 p.m. A large cement truck took down some low hanging wires. The wires were not live wires; Comcast and Verizon repaired the cable wires in about an hour. The police were unable to locate the cement truck in the area, but are checking with local cement companies to see if they had any deliveries scheduled for the area on the day of the incident.

Suspicious activity

A 2006 Chrysler Pacifica traveling southbound on North Main Street near the new train station pulled over after a small cardboard tube flew into the driver's side window and landed in the backseat. The driver, a 67-year-old male from Hingham, called for police assistance. The officer responding was able to determine the inch long cardboard tube was a spent cartridge from a "screamer siren."

"Screamer sirens are powder activated devices used to frighten birds, they are often used on golf course to scare away Canada geese," said Sgt. Quigley. The superintendent of Cohasset Golf Club was contacted and it was confirmed that the grounds crew was deploying the device minutes before the call. It is unclear how the cartridge made its way into the street and car, but golf club officials agreed to review their policies so the accident doesn't happen again.

"There's no criminality in the matter, just an unfortunate accident," said Quigley.

Protective custody

At about 5:30 p.m on Wednesday (Aug. 15), Cohasset police received an abandoned 911 call. Although the caller hung up before speaking with the 911 dispatch, the call still registered at the station. With the enhanced 911 system dispatch knew where the call came from and sent an officer to the residence on South Main Street.

Upon arrival, police found an unwanted female guest at the house. The 38-year-old from Scituate had been drinking, according to police. The responding officers attempted to arrange a ride for her at the location, but she would not cooperate by giving the officers a name of a friend. The officers took the female into protective custody at the station where she was later released to a sober friend and was told not to return to the South Main Street residence.

Bridge jumping

Police have tried to stay on top of bridge jumping this summer.

"As usual this has been a busy season trying to keep kids moving off the Border Street Bridge," said Quigley, "but we've been on top of it this year and it hasn't been as bad as in past years."

Safety concerns are the major reason police discourage bridge jumping. Because kids congregate at the bridge, it often disrupts traffic flow and causes a littering problem. The act of jumping off the bridge is also illegal, according to town bylaws.

"On real hot days we try to put a detail officer at the bridge," said Quigley. "We're vigilant about it."

Drive-by egging

A mother and her daughter were walking near the intersection of Jerusalem Road and Forest Ave. on Thursday (Aug. 16) when a red SUV drove by and threw an egg hitting the mother in the back. The woman was unable to get a plate number for the vehicle. A broadcast message was issued to Cohasset and regional police to be on the lookout for a red SUV with three or more teenagers. The suspect's car has not been located and no similar incidents were reported.

Testing the waters

bylaw to regulate stormwater will be required by the federal Clean Water Act in less than a year. If something isn't in place, the town could face fines from the government.

Stormwater is defined as any rainwater that runs along the surface collecting pollutants.

The newest version of the stormwater management bylaw has changed drastically from the version put forth for the last Town Meeting. No longer does the Stormwater Committee seek to establish a full-blown Stormwater Commission with the ability to issue permits and collect fees.

"There's no new layer of bureaucracy," said Nee. The establishment of a new committee was one of the reasons the initial bylaw did not fly with the board of selectmen. The Stormwater Committee will remain a town board to serve in an advisory role and will seek grants, assess flooding, make recommendations and provide support to other town boards.

Regulations for a stormwater permit will apply to new construction, the main purpose is to ensure an addition or new home will not exacerbate the current stormwater runoff situation. They will be looking for projects with equal or less than pre-development runoff. The permit will apply to construction that will disturb one acre or more of land, development of an undeveloped parcel of any size and any building where there is a net increase of 30 percent or more of impervious area.

The Stormwater Committee's consultant, Mark Bartlett of Norfolk Ram, determined the 30 percent threshold was where surface changes started to make a significant difference, said Nee.

Despite the changes in the bylaw, Planning Board Chairman Al Moore anticipated some real confusion with the bylaw and was concerned about the added cost to homeowners.

"It's very complicated stuff and they'll need to hire an engineer to figure it out," said Moore, who worried neither the homeowners nor building inspector could easily determine if construction added an additional 30 percent impervious triggering the stormwater permit. Concern about his board's ability to take on another permitting process also came up. "We're already out straight," Moore said.

Planning Board Member Stuart Ivimey largely disagreed with Moore's concerns. He said applicants could easily determine if their project increased the impervious area by 30 percent by a simple calculation. In addition, the added permitting process would not necessarily require additional public hearings. Permits could be dealt with at hearings for other reasons. The bylaw empowers other boards in town, namely the Board of Health and Conservation Commission, to issue permits if a project came before them and not the Planning Board. The building inspector could also be a permit granting authority in some cases.

"The bylaw will give the town enough leverage to make sure development is not adding to stormwater runoff," said Nee.

The new Stormwater Committee, if the bylaw passes at Town Meeting (the committee is currently a temporary board), will be a vehicle for public education as well.

"We want people thinking about what they are doing by building a back porch, even if it's not regulated, they would be educated," said Stormwater Committee member Sarah Charron.

Planning board members seemed in support of the bylaw in concept, but did not want the message lost in the process.

"We applaud the effort so far. It's a tough issue because most of the problems are the ones you can't see," said planning board member Mike Westcott and advised, "simplify the process and message."

"Refine it at least so it can be explained clearly," said Moore.

Basking in 'Becky's Baskets'

"Mary (Fleming) had the picture put on the basket because she thought it looked like me as a little girl," says Hartshorne. Fleming's would have a stock of baskets for sale but would also take custom orders, like Hartshorne's basket, says Connell.

Her husband, John, has used the wastebasket by his desk since they were married in 1960.

"They are not only attractive, they hold up well," says Hartshorne.

Connell's father was Rebecca's cousin so growing up he was well aware of her basket business. Sometimes he would buy small cans of paint for her at the downtown Hingham 5 & 10 store. Although he does not know the exact process she developed over the years to make the sturdy and charming baskets, he does know the majority of the raw materials.

"She used to ask people to save her the boxes men's suits came in," he says, which she used to make the body and bottom of the basket. The cardboard was durable yet pliable. She would make the baskets stable using coat hanger wire for the top and sides to give the basket its oval shape. Cloth would cover the entire structure, then she would use homemade paste, passé par tout (paper on a roll) and shellac to decorate the exterior of the basket. Rebecca would collect interesting photographs, placemats and paintings to put on the baskets.

"She used to sit upstairs in a wicker chair with a card table to make the baskets," says Connell of her workspace.

However, Rebecca didn't set out to make baskets for a living. She was born in Cohasset in 1874. At the age of 20, she married Joseph Hock, the stage manager for the Hanlon Superba, a theatrical company headquartered in Cohasset. The Hocks went on tour with the Hanlons, and then together they joined the James O'Neill Company (owned by Eugene O'Neill's parents) where the performing troupe did only dramatic plays. Rebecca acted in many of the plays. They likely would have continued a life in the performing circuit had it not been for Joseph's sudden death at age 32. Rebecca decided to return to her family home on James Lane.

The Minot's Light basket is both the largest basket but also the more striking one. Rebecca Downs Hock made the center basket and the left basket, while Judy Sestito made the one on the right.

Once back in Cohasset she began making the baskets until the early 60s. She died at the age of 93 in 1967. The unfortunate part of her craft is she did not sign any of the baskets, but Connell can spot them almost instantly. In recent years he has found two of the baskets at Cohasset yard sales for very little money. He has six in his personal collection and about 20 are currently on display. Once word got out the Historical Society was looking for Becky's Baskets, he received two from New Jersey and two from Maryland. Some were not personally made by Rebecca, but were made under her instruction and with her method.

"The point is they held up pretty good through the years," said Connell. He has used his personal baskets throughout his house since the 1960s. He commissioned Rebecca to make one with a scene of Hingham in her later years.

"Who ever considered a wastepaper basket a work of art, but it is," says Connell, "I'd love to know more but there is no way for me to find out," says Connell, as so much time has passed since the last basket was sold and it's likely many of them have been thrown away or lost over the years.

Becky's Baskets are on display at the Historical Society lobby located at 106 South Main Street. If you have any information about Becky's Baskets or own one yourself, Connell and the Historical Society would love to hear about it, please call (781) 383-1434.

Ledge anchors new look

Cohasset Garden Club revives area between museums

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset's topography is peppered with outcroppings of rock ledge each with unique beauty. Now, thanks to a partnership between the Cohasset Garden Club and the Historical Society, a piece of ledge is prominently displayed in the village nestled between the Wilson House and the Maritime Museum.

The ledge has been a part of the village likely since the last Ice Age, but in recent years it has been largely hidden beneath a thick mat of weeds and ivy. Like any good discovery, the uncovering of the ledge has been a long process.

The Cohasset Garden Club has maintained the area between the two historic buildings for many years; it is named in memory of Virginia Knowles, a former garden club member. Both buildings have recently undergone major renovation and machinery and workmen often trampled the open space. The renovation finished this past winter and both buildings are open for visitors this summer.

"It's been the garden club's most expensive project to date, but we feel very rewarded to have had the opportunity to do this project for the Historical Society and for the town."
— Mary Hartshorne

"We knew we would have to re-plant the garden at some point," says Mary Hartshorne, who serves as the liaison between the Historical Society and the garden club. The rebirth of the garden began with the construction and repair of a retaining wall in the courtyard by local mason Brendan St. John. Brick between the two museums was re-laid and irregular bluestone was brought into the garden for a simple yet attractive walkway. Town Meeting allocated Community Preservation funds to the project, which was completed in the spring.

Next up was planting a historically accurate garden, says Hartshorne. Margaret Cotter, landscape architect and garden club member re-designed the area to include period appropriate plantings.

"I chose newer varieties of plants that would have been prevalent when the structures were built," says Cotter. In addition, she chose plants keeping the historical significance of the buildings in mind. For the Wilson House, once home Captain John Wilson's nine children, Cotter chose plantings suitable for a 19th century household. Thyme and mint grow in a small herb garden, lavender is intermixed with goldsturm (commonly known as black eyed susans), daylilies and geraniums.

Next door, the Maritime Museum has a much different history. Built in 1760, the once vibrant Bates Ship Chandlery on Border Street was moved to its current locale in 1956. With that in mind, Cotter chose plantings more appropriate for a seaside location: sea berry, bear berry and a small blueberry shrub grow on the side of the garden closest to the Maritime Museum. The Garden Club bought and installed all the plantings. Name cards for the plantings are in the works.

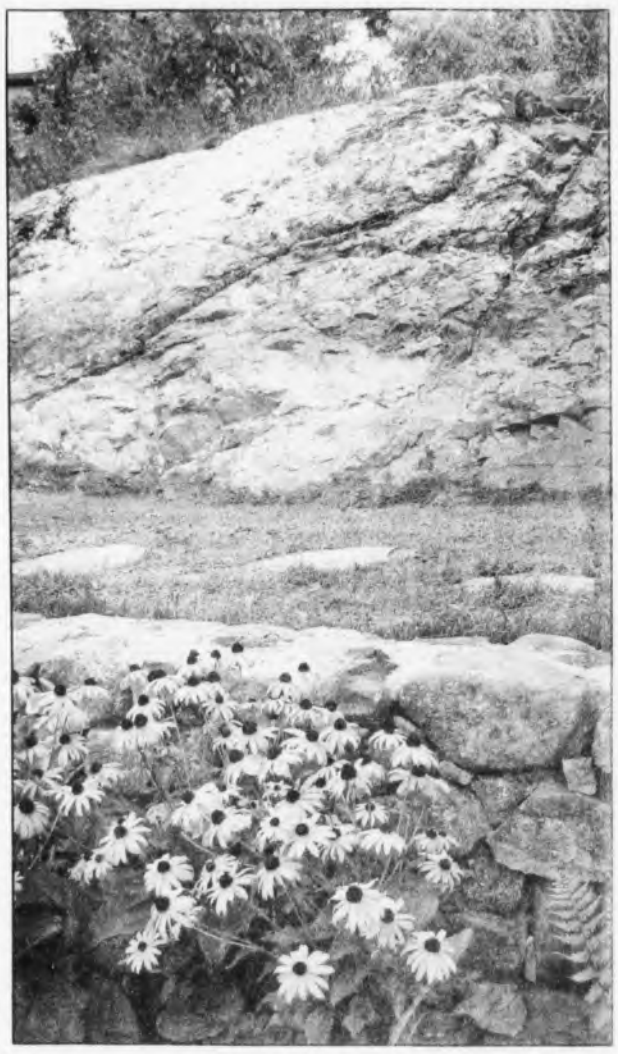
Lastly, the Cohasset Garden Club decided to do something about the overgrown and evasive vines growing on the ledge and the 10 feet between the retaining wall and the ledge. Satisfied with Brendan St. John's past work for the Historical Society, the Garden Club contracted him to clear the space.

"It seemed simple enough," says Hartshorne, but it turned out to be a bigger job than originally expected.

St. John thought removing the ivy from the ledge would only be a one-day project, but with unexpected findings the effort took "three long days with a very large crew." There was bad soil, rocks, rubble, vines, weeds and even a tree stump — there was enough debris in the small area to fill 15 pick-up trucks.

Once the ledge was uncovered and pressure washed, St. John noticed there were three mound of ledge in bad shape. The rock was all shale and crumbling from age. He and his crew removed the crumbling rock to reveal the solid piece of ledge there today.

The last step was to bring in loam and hydro seed to fill the open space with grass, "now the Historical Society has a very nice piece of land," says St. John.



"It's been the garden club's most expensive project to date," at a total of $3,500, says Hartshorne, "but we feel very rewarded to have had the opportunity to do this project for the Historical Society and for the town. The natural coastal ledge fits in nicely."

In addition to the "wonderful ledge," the Historical Society has increased its useable space, "we now have more open space and easier access to the two buildings," says Historical Society President Kathy O'Malley. Grass will soon fill in for the area and the Garden Club is already thinking about a few additional plantings for the area, says Hartshorne.

With new sidewalks and a freshly paved Elm Street, the open space and ledge compliments the village's revitalized look.

"With new restaurants and shops, the downtown is becoming more vibrant and I hope this area will be a part of it," says Cotter.

The Captain John Wilson House is open to the public Tuesday thru Friday 1 to 4:30p.m. and Saturday 10a.m.-2p.m. from June until September. The nearby Maritime Museum (next door to the Wilson House) is open the same hours. Admission is free, but donations are always welcome. For more information, visit www.cohassethistoricalsociety.org or call 781-383-1434.

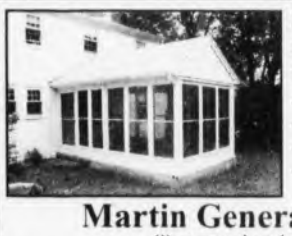
The Cohasset Garden Club has been hard at work bringing back the garden that is nestled between the Wilson House and the Maritime Museum.

Anchors away

A historic anchor complements the natural beauty of the uncovered ledge. The wrought iron anchor has been a fixture on the ledge since it was donated to the Historical Society in 1960. Brothers Herbert and Kenneth Jason, both lobstermen and divers, found the anchor on a dive off Jerusalem Road, says Cohasset historian David Wadsworth. The Historical Society thought the ledge next to the Maritime Museum was an appropriate locale for the ancient anchor.



"The anchor likely came from a large ship," says Wadsworth, but which one or when it was lost at sea is unknown. The anchor has aged, a wooden crosspiece is largely missing and the wrought iron has begun to peel away. Yet the anchor is an enduring symbol of Cohasset's maritime history.

Brendan St. John and his crew were careful not to disturb the anchor during their work. Instead of using a pressure washer, they air washed around the artifact to clean the ledge beneath it.

Wind power up in the air

The Alternative Energy Committee and the planning board are priming the town for a wind turbine. An addition to the town's zoning bylaws would create guidelines to govern the implementation of wind turbines in Cohasset. The bylaw will go before voters at the fall Town Meeting.

The bylaw will clearly establish setbacks necessary for a wind turbine. Height restrictions are paramount: the total height of the turbine has to be less than the measure from the base of the turbine to the closest lot line.

Key to the implementation of the bylaw is determining which board will review the applications; both the planning board and zoning board of appeals would like to oversee the process.

"The AEC doesn't want to get involved in the crossfire," said AEC member Mike Bliss. It seemed all three boards agreed a one-stop process would allow for a more comprehensive and end in a more fair review for the applicant.

"The last thing we need is a divisive issue," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, who added that the planning bard was the more appropriate board to review the wind turbine applications. "I've always thought the role of the ZBA was suited to those who want relief from the rules."

Moore said he would call the ZBA chairman, Woody Chittick, to discuss the issue.

The planning board is sponsoring the wind bylaw for the fall special Town Meeting and has met with AEC members on several previous occasions.

The AEC is investigating the possibility of a town-owned wind turbine. In May, a MET tower was installed on Turkey Hill to collect wind data. The data will be analyzed to determine if Cohasset has sufficient wind to support a wind turbine. Possible locations include the Recycling Transfer Facility and the Middle-High School.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello Cohasset. I hope that you are all enjoying the last few weeks of summer before the start of school. It is so sad that we are at this point already but I guess that happens.

Hey, what do you all think about the train? I am excited for the train and the benefits however, it is definitely an eye-opener to see it go by. Big, purple and well, BIG! Please remember to talk with your children about the safety aspects as we get closer to the official opening of it this fall.

Not much in the way of news this week but it is all great to write about and read nonetheless.

Have a great week!

JUST FOR LAUGHS

Auditions for Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of "Moon Over Buffalo" by Ken Ludwig, will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave, Cohasset on Sunday, Sept. 9 from 5-8 p.m. & Monday, Sept. 10 from 7-9 p.m. Call backs, if needed, Tuesday, Sept. 11 at 7 p.m. The cast size is four men and four women. Performance dates will be Nov. 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, & 11 at the Cohasset Town Hall.

This hilarious comedy centers on George & Charlotte Hay, two fading repertory stars in 1950s Buffalo. They've lost their last chance at stardom, their agent is smitten with Charlotte and the company ingénue is pregnant by George. The plot is full of misunderstandings, misplaced affections and missing persons. The show premiered on Broadway starring Carol Burnett.

RUNNING STRONG

Wow, fantastic job to Bob Riley, age 77 who completed his 16th Falmouth Road Race Sunday, Aug. 12, 2007. He ran with his 19 year-old grandson, Cam Riley and his niece and her husband. His wife, Carol, and sons, Mike, Brian and David, cheered him on from the sideline.

You should be so proud of yourself Bob on this accomplishment.

HONOR ROLL

Congratulations go out to Caroline Saltonstall, class of '09 who was named to the honor roll for the spring 2007 semester. This recognition was from the Brooks School, located on the shores of Cochichewick in North Andover. Nice news, Caroline.

DEAN'S LIST

Caitlin Gontarz of Cohasset was named to the dean's list at the University of New Hampshire for both the fall and spring semesters of the 2006/2007 academic year. Great work Caitlin.

Lessons to reinforce

It's hard to believe, but another school year is just around the corner. Most students and probably many teachers are still in denial, yet the clock is ticking.

If you visit or drive by any of our schools you will see the bustle of activity as maintenance workers, ambitious teachers and eager administrators make their much-needed preparations. And no doubt, your own child, like many, is feverishly cramming to finish his or her summer reading list just in time for tests or project deadlines.

It is that annual rite of passage we all bemoan, knowing full well that while the calendar says it is still summer, we all know better. In Cohasset, public schools get back into full swing the week after Labor Day while many private schools will kick into gear as early as this coming week.

Along with a talk about Greenbush and its impact in our communities, it is just as important to remind children about other safety measures when traveling to and from school.

There's no better time as we prepare for last-minute shopping trips for the latest trendy school fashions or hip school supplies to have a conversation with our kids about school safety. It seems this year more than any other in the past it is critical we have these conversations given the return of the Greenbush line. Safety issues need to top our back to school "to do" lists. Today's issue features a number of helpful tips and reminders regarding train safety as Greenbush gets set to roll in late September or early October. Public safety officials recommend parents review these tips with their children.

Along with a talk about Greenbush and its impact in our communities, it is just as important to remind children about other safety measures when traveling to and from school. A national safety advisory group encourages us to talk to our children about bus safety to avoid any potential accidents. The group reminds us that some 26 students were killed in the U.S. last year and some 9,000 were injured in incidents involving buses. Believe it or not, very few of those even involved a crash; they were merely the result of carelessness getting on and off the bus. Some of the group's advice:

- Have a safe place to wait for your bus, away from traffic and the street.
- Stay away from the bus until it comes to a complete stop and the driver signals you to enter.
- When being dropped off, exit the bus and walk ten giant steps away from the bus. Keep a safe distance between you and the bus. Also, remember that the bus driver can see you best when you are back away from the bus.
- Use the handrail to enter and exit the bus.
- Stay away from the bus until the driver gives his/her signal that it's okay to approach.
- Be aware of the street traffic around you. Drivers are required to follow certain rules of the road concerning school buses, however, not all do. Protect yourself and watch out.

They sound basic enough, but are worth reinforcing.

Good luck to all of our scholars, teachers, administrators and staff. We hope for a new school year filled with promise, excitement and lots of learning.

Cohasset Republican Town Committee Cookout scheduled for Sept. 9

The highlight of the summer is the annual Cohasset Republican Town Committee Cookout, which will take place at 4:30 p.m., on Sunday, Sept. 9, at Lou Harvey's home, 465 King St., Cohasset. Tickets are $25 per person and $40 per couple. After Sept. 4, tickets are $30 per person and $45 per couple. Invited speakers are "Amo" Hougton, former U.S. Congressman, 1986 through 2001, from Corning, N.Y., and Mickie Edwards, a former U.S. Congressman, 1977 through 1993, from Oklahoma. Local elected officials will also be invited.

To make reservations, send checks payable to Cohasset Republican Town Committee and mail to Judy Volungis, 234 Forest Ave., Cohasset, MA 02043. Call Julie Guild, chairman, at 781-383-6443, or Polly Logan at 781-383-0031 for more information.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

It takes a village...

TO THE EDITOR:

My wife Joy and I want to thank the town of Cohasset officials, but especially Mark Brennan and Tom Gruber, for their great management of the village revitalization project. We can't thank them enough for their expertise and professionalism during the project. Many, many customers tell us how much they love the new look of the village, especially the mix of brick and granite accents.

We also want to commend the construction company for their great employees and workmanship. It's rare to have workers not swearing and helping customers in and out of our store during the construction.

Our small town character is kept alive when you have people like Mark and Tom overseeing projects like this. Cohasset looks so much better fixed up. Please keep up the great work!

HEALTH NOTES

Spanish flu proves to be a deadly foe

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Found during renovation of the Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum was a poignant footnote to health in Cohasset during the winter of 1918, a picture of the USS Cohasset. In Quincy's Fore River shipyard, on Nov. 3, the USS Cohasset, a freighter, was launched, shortly thereafter making two crossings to France to pick up soldiers returning from the war. Since March of that year, the Spanish flu had been devastating the planet. Records from the time indicate that hundreds of passengers on Naval transports would contact the disease. The incubation time was five days and the trip from France took a little more than twice that. World War I had claimed an estimated 16 million lives. By the spring of 1919, the influenza epidemic sweeping the world would kill an estimated 50 million people. One fifth of the world's population was infected; more people than any other illness in recorded history.

Beginning at Fort Riley, Kansas, in April of 1918, initially, the symptoms were mild but spread rapidly. By fall, the virus had mutated. The flu progressed in three discrete waves. The first in the summer of 1918, relatively mild, but far reaching. In cities and the countryside, from the densely populated East Coast to the remotest parts of Alaska, young adults, usually unaffected by infectious flu diseases, were among the hardest hit along with elderly and the very young children. The flu afflicted more than 25 percent of the U.S. population. In the fall, a secondary, more virulent outbreak became apparent. The early flu had relatively low mortality, about 0.1 percent; by fall, with the same high infection rate, mortality began to rise to as much as 2.5 percent; higher than any other flu episode in history. In 1919, average life expectancy in the United States dropped by 12 years. Half of the U.S. soldiers who died in Europe, fell to influenza.

The war brought the virus back into the U.S. for a second wave of the epidemic. It first arrived in Boston in September of 1918 through the port busy with war shipments of machinery and supplies. Men across the nation were mobilizing to join the military and the cause. As they came together, they brought the virus with them and to those they contacted. The virus killed almost 200,000 in October of 1918 alone. Nov. 11, 1918, the end of the war, caused a resurgence as people celebrated Armistice Day with parades and large parties. A third wave occurred in the spring of 1919 as soldiers returned from France in transports, including Cohasset.

The 1918 pandemic was different in degree, but not in kind, from previous and subsequent pandemics. Despite the extraordinary number of global deaths, most influenza cases in 1918 were mild and essentially indistinguishable from influenza cases today. However, some characteristics of the pandemic appear unique: death rates were 5–20 times higher than expected, apparently the result of a higher proportion of severe and complicated infections of the respiratory tract. Also, the deaths were concentrated in an unusually young age group. Finally, in 1918, three separate recurrences of influenza followed each other with unusual rapidity, resulting in three explosive pandemic waves within a year's time. Finally, both humans and swine were infected simultaneously.

USS Cohasset at launching in Quincy's Fore River shipyard on Nov. 3, 1918.

The sources for this report conclude that since it happened once, analogous conditions could lead to an equally devastating pandemic. Even with modern antiviral and antibacterial drugs, vaccines and prevention knowledge, the return of a pandemic virus equivalent in pathogenicity to the virus of 1918 would likely kill more 100 million people worldwide. Although recent laboratory experiments with viruses containing genes from the 1918 strain suggest that they would be as sensitive as other typical virus strains to the Food and Drug Administration–approved antiinfluenza drugs rimantadine and oseltamivir, a pandemic virus with the potential of some recent H5N1 outbreaks could cause substantially more deaths.

Cohasset lost five citizens in World War I, as far as we know; none from flu. There were two flu deaths in 1918; none in 1919 or 1920. All deaths in Cohasset:1918-28; 1919-36; 1920-56.

Greenbush activity picks up steam

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Anyone who has been in the vicinity of the Greenbush line knows that the MBTA has been very actively running trains on the new rails. In the past, we talked about how each crossing would be tested successively at different speeds up to the maximum rated speed for that crossing. For the purpose of testing, the entire Greenbush has been divided into overlapping test zones, or segments, with testing starting at the Scituate end. Cohasset crossings lie within segments 2, 3, 4, 5 & 6. There are a total of 10 segments to be tested for the whole line. What this means to us is that 1/2 of all the testing segments involve Cohasset crossings. So, we'll see lots of action.

Around the horns — We've had several calls asking why the horns are being blown during testing. These residents know that this is supposed to be a no horn system. Why then are there horns? Like most things associated with Greenbush, the answer is not simple. First of all, until all of the crossing and safety equipment is tested and approved, blowing horns just makes sense. Plus, it's mandatory for safety reasons. Also, the five towns involved in the Greenbush line must apply for a no horn permit (called a Hornless Waiver). The MBTA cannot make the application; it must come from the towns. The Town of Hingham has taken the lead and filed the necessary paperwork for all five towns with the Federal Railroad Administration. Until the permit is granted, the MBTA must blow their horns.

Sub-surface drains will prevent water from draining onto Forest Ave.

More About Forest Avenue — As promised in our article last week, the base coat of asphalt is now laid at the Main Street end of Forest Ave. Fortunately, the weather has been very cooperative so far. We know that there have been parts of the project that look like no one is working. But, that's the way construction is. The various construction firms we have had working on this project are very large firms. Sometime, our work is "small potatoes" to them. Remember, last week the contractor paved 2,600 feet of road in less than a day.

This whole project was structured by the town to minimize the cost. Otherwise, we would not be able to do as much as we are. Usually, an engineering firm is hired to develop the project plans and specifications and then to supervise the construction work. For this project, we were fortunate enough to have Norfolk County Engineering do all of the plans and specifications, at no direct expense to the town, a real money saver. Rather than bid the project to a contractor and pay his markup on all subcontractor costs, we chose a more economical route. There is a South Shore Consortium who gets bid prices for nearly all construction commodities. We have found these prices are about the lowest prices possible. So, we are purchasing the construction work all from these low bidders on an individual basis for each commodity. Then, we are managing the project and coordinating all of these separate contractors. So we get an excellent price and save the general contractor's markup and oversight costs. Doing this certainly gets the biggest bang for our buck, but certainly is a coordination challenge.

Bike escapes have been designed into the Forest Ave. sidewalk to allow bikers to escape from the roadway where the granite curbing would otherwise prevent bikes leaving the street for safety on the sidewalk.

The Great Escape — One of the unusual things we have designed into the Forest Ave. sidewalk is the "bike escape." Bike escapes are areas where bikes can escape from the roadway where the granite curbing would otherwise prevent bikes leaving the street for safety on the sidewalk. Normally, bikes can use driveways for this purpose. However, on Forest, the driveways are sometimes quite far apart. With this design there will always be either a driveway or bike escape every two to three hundred feet.

Safety measures — There are some other things we have designed into the project that should make the road safer for all. There are three areas where water drains from property along side the road directly into the street. These areas not only cause extra water on the road, but in freezing conditions cause ice in the roadway. To solve this problem we have added sub-surface sidewalk drains. Ah-ha, what is this you ask? Simple – on the land side of the sidewalk we add a drainage swale, or depression, with a pipe at its bottom which will collect the storm water. The pipe then runs under the sidewalk draining the water to the nearest storm drain. Additionally, if the sub-surface drains were not installed the new sidewalk could create a damming effect for storm water runoff. This could cause puddling on private property, which is now avoided with these new sub-surface drains.

The center of a 50-foot right of way owned by the town was marked this week in white paint by a number, a cross and another number.

In the accompanying photo, the buried pipe lies at the bottom of the area covered by the rocks at the lower left. The pipe, located under the sidewalk, then collects the water, carries it to a drain manhole near the construction barrel at the upper right. In this example the drainpipe is about 62 feet in length. The net result is no more water on Forest Ave. at this location.

Crunching numbers — An interesting bit of trivia... The town owns a 50-foot wide right of way for Forest Ave. The center of this 50-foot right of way was marked this week in white paint by a number, a cross and another number. (See photo). The numbers represent the distance from Main Street. The first number is the distance in hundreds of feet. The cross represents the center of the 50-foot right of way. The second number is in feet. So in the example, this specific number marks a particular spot at the center of the 50 foot right of way that is 2,900 feet from Main Street. (2900 + 00 feet).

Now the next time you drive down Forest Ave., notice how these markings wander from side to side along the length of the road. What you see is reality. The actual road meanders nearly 20 feet to 25 feet side to side. But, it is always within the 50-foot right of way.

The Elvis of his day

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The guys who spotted him in the Burger King in Marshfield the other day may dispute the point but I have it on fairly good authority that Elvis Presley has been dead for 30 years. I read it in the Herald last week.

Not only that, but I read that Graceland, his estate in Memphis, took in $27 million last year alone and what is known as the Elvis Business is good for $40 million each year in T-shirts, coffee mugs and other memorabilia.

And they don't have the expense of paying the star a cent. The Elvis Business is not labor intensive.

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth we had our own Elvis whose dulcet tones made the ladies, both young and old, swoon as his voice, spiced with a slight nasal charm and sometimes magnified by a megaphone, floated over the airways.

His name was Rudy Vallee and they called him "The Vagabond Lover."

Female hearts fluttered when the sad-eyed, curly-haired crooner opened his popular "The Fleischmann Hour" variety show on NBC with the greeting "Hi-ho everybody," and went into his theme song, "My time is your time."

Rudy attended Yale and planned to be a teacher until somehow he got hold of a saxophone and the teacher was lost to education. He formed a band in 1929 called "The Connecticut Yankees" and set out to make his fortune.

George Simon, who wrote for Metronome, the music magazine, through the '30s, recalled the The Connecticut Yankees as not much of a band but its leader was something else.

"Actually," he recalled, "his Connecticut Yankees sounded like a pretty dreary group, but Vallee himself, of course, was a stellar attraction. Starting in 1928, he and his megaphone and his tantalizing tonsils captured feminine hearts throughout the country."

It wasn't long before Rudy dumped the band and went on to star in The Fleischmann Hour as a single. The program, which lasted until 1939, was credited by some with being the first real radio variety show, the one that introduced Bob Hope to the public.

His popularity was such that the talents of other male singers were judged against his. Most were found wanting.

When Ozzie Nelson burst on the scene in 1932, Simon, reviewing his performance with his band at the Glen Island Casino in New Rochelle, N. Y., wrote that he "sang in a slightly hip Rudy Vallee manner."

Young fans of Ozzie's son Ricky might be surprised to learn that the father is regarded in some quarters as better than the son.

Again, in the spring of 1941, to the strains of his theme song, "Racing with the Moon," Vaughan Monroe made his big time debut in Frank Daily's Meadowbrook Ballroom in New Jersey, and Simon had this to say:

"When they hear his voice . . . they go girlishly ga-ga. His smile sends romantic, not musical, shivers down spines that are just beginning to harden. Here is the modern generation's Rudy Vallee."

Getting a taste of the Question Cone

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

To Cory and his friends, winter fantasies were usually just that: stories of snow drifts and sleigh rides and roasting chestnuts, memories of a simpler time that existed only in songs now.

But progress hadn't killed the pleasures of a New England summer. There were endless games of flashlight tag, road races, outdoor concerts, water rockets, star gazing, pool parties, fireworks, camping, parades, Fla-Vor-Ice, baseball, fishing, cycling, and best of all, no school. Summer break, that blessed confluence of ideal weather and an almost embarrassingly long vacation in which to fully enjoy it, was a scheduling anomaly in Kid World — the only hard evidence that the adults who ran that world actually knew what they were doing.

After a glorious June and a wild, independent July, Cory's 10th summer was now winding down. Nights came earlier and mornings were cooler. He wore long sleeves and pants as he rode his bike downtown, heading for the barber shop and the hair cut that would mark the official start of back-to-school season.

An ice cream truck drove past him and stopped beside the baseball field, stirring a buzz of activity among the younger spectators. Cory had pole position and quickly decided the barber's tip would be better spent on a Creamsicle than on shaving cream. He dropped his bike on the grass and was first in line at the window.

"What can I get you?" the young woman asked without much enthusiasm. It was only mid-morning but she seemed worn out already.

"I'll have a —" An unusual name on the handwritten list caught Cory's eye.

"What's a Question Cone?"

"That's been discontinued," she said. "But I have three left."

"What flavor is it?"

"Vanilla. And some of them have a chocolate ball inside the ice cream.

"You ask a question before you eat it, and if you get a chocolate ball it means the answer's yes."

Cory had never heard of anything like this. "Does it really work?"

"No, but they taste pretty good. These are the last three right here."

"Okay, I'll have one please."

The Question Cone was wrapped in silver Mylar with directions written on it that warned against breaking the seal prematurely.

"1) Open package. 2) Ask one 'yes or no' question. 3) Wait 10 seconds before eating. 4) Chocolate ball inside means yes!"

Cory had to use his teeth to tear the tough plastic. Feeling a bit silly, he went with an easy question. "Where — I mean, am I going to get my hair cut?" he asked the cone. He looked at the ice cream woman, who shrugged.

"Take a big bite off the top," she said. Cory stuffed the cone into his mouth, bit down, and shook his head.

"See?" the woman said. "It's just a gimmick."

Cory hopped on his bike and ate the rest of the cone while he steered with one hand. It was delicious, even if it was too dumb to know where he was going. He pulled up to the barber shop and leaned his bike against the rack.

The sign in the window said, "Closed." Two men were busy inside painting the ceiling with rollers. Paint-speckled cloths were draped over the barber chairs, sinks and counters.

Cory mounted the bike again and started for home, but something felt odd. He stopped and squeezed the tires. The rear one was losing air, so he picked up the pace. When he passed the ball field the ice cream truck was gone, but as he approached the town common there it was again. He stood up on the pedals and coasted, thinking.

"Do you have any more Question Cones?" he asked the woman.

"You liked it, huh? I have two left."

"I'll have one please."

Cory hurried to a secluded, shady spot, glanced around self-consciously, and tore open the package.

"Will my tire go flat before I make it home?" he asked. "Aaaa!"

Cory dropped the ice cream on the ground and leaped back. It had trembled in his hand, ever so slightly, like one of those Mexican beans with the worm inside. Afraid to touch it he gently squashed it on the grass with his sneaker. In the center of the ice cream was a core of dark chocolate, cool and hard on the outside, melted and still warm on the inside.

Cory turned in shock to look at the ice cream truck. It was driving away again. He dashed to his bike and peddled toward home as fast as he could.

Sure enough, his tire went completely flat a quarter mile from his house.

He ditched his bike in the woods and ran home in an all out sprint.

It took him half an hour to convince Matt, his best friend, that they needed to commandeer his mother's car. After much bribery Matt's older sister agreed to help, and they drove off in a cloud of dust to find the ice cream truck.

Meanwhile word had gotten around among the neighborhood kids that something was up with Cory. By the time he returned with the last Question Cone and strode ominously toward Matt's backyard fort, a crowd of twenty was gathered to witness with open minds whatever was about to take place.

He told them all to be absolutely quiet. Then he entered the shanty-like fort alone, crouched down, bit the wrapper, tore it open and gingerly lay the treat on the floor like a live grenade.

"Is there no chocolate ball inside this ice cream cone?" he said. Then he darted outside and latched the door.

At first nothing happened. Then they heard a strange sound, like corn kernels popping and unpopping inside a steel drum. It got louder. The walls of the fort vibrated and bowed outward. Shrieking with excitement the kids ran away in all directions as the noise grew to a deafening rumble. In a final spasm of recursion Matt's fort suddenly jumped off the ground and exploded in a geyser of vanilla ice cream and chocolate balls that shot into the sky, briefly blotted out the sun and rained down in a torrent on every house, car and giddy child within two hundred yards of the epicenter.

It was the greatest end to the greatest summer in recorded history.

'Mayflower' next up for discussion by book group

Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 35 Ripley Road, Cohasset. For information or to sign up for classes, call 781-383-1348 or visit gwalsh@ocln.org.

Library Book Group – There will be no August meeting of the Library Book Group. The next meeting will be at 10 a.m., on Wednesday, Sept. 26. The group will discuss Nathaniel Philbrick's book "Mayflower."

Movie Matinee – The public is invited to come to a daytime showing of the classic movie "Harvey," starring Jimmy Stewart and Josephine Hull at 11 a.m., on Friday, Sept. 7. Free admission and light refreshments provided by the Friends of the Library.

Independent Film Night – The library will show the independent film "Viva Cuba" at 6 p.m., on Thursday, Sept. 20, in the Meeting Room. Malu is from an upper-class family and her single mother does not want her to play with Jorgito, as she thinks his background is coarse and commonplace. Jorgito's mother, a poor Socialist proud of her family's social standing, places similar restrictions on her son. What neither woman recognizes is the strength of the bond between Malu and Jorgito. When the children learn that Malu's mother is planning to leave Cuba, they decide to run away and travel to the other side of the island to find Malu's father and persuade him against signing the forms that would allow it. Free admission and free refreshments courtesy of the Friends of the Library.

Great Decisions Group – The first Great Decisions Discussion group will begin at 2:30 p.m., on Sunday, Sept. 9, in the Meeting Room. For those who have registered for the program, the group will be discussing the Middle East found in Chapter One of the assigned text.

FOR CHILDREN

Summer Reading – Don't wait until the last minute to do summer required reading. The library still has copies of many of the popular books. See Mrs. Moody or a member of the circulation staff for help. Cohasset Middle/High School reading lists may be downloaded from the Web site at cohassetlibrary.org. Click on Young Adult and then click on CMHS Summer Reading from the side menu. Click on the list wanted and then print. For more information, email smoody@ocln.org or call 781-383-1348, ext. 3.

Backpack Time – The statewide summer reading program, "Catch the Beat @ Your Library," has come to an end. Bring in summer reading logs to share with Mrs. Moody. All students who have met or exceeded their summer reading goal will be awarded a "Catch the Beat @ Your Library" backpack.

Free Drama Workshop for Kids – On Saturday, Aug. 25, from 10 to 11 a.m., Drama Kids International will present a free drama workshop for students ages 6 through 11 in the Meeting Room. "Our Drama Kids" programs are designed to enhance verbal skills and build confidence through the fun and creativity of drama. Register for this event by going to cohassetlibrary.org. Click on Calendar and then click on Saturday, Aug. 25, Drama Develops Kids. Fill out the online form including the students name and age. Buttonwood Books welcomes author

Buttonwood Books & Toys welcomes Scituate resident Lynne Reeves Griffin for a reception to celebrate the release of her book, "Negotiation Generation: Take Back Your Parental Authority Without Punishment," at 2 p.m., on Sunday, Sept. 9, at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Route 3A, Cohasset.

Life in the first decade of the 21st century is busy and chaotic, and while it is impractical to return to the time before cell phones, Internet and the 72-channel television, parents need to take control. Many of today's parents are caught in a verbal tug-of-war with their children where requests become platforms for endless discussion. Griffin's book "Negotiation Generation" offers practical guidelines and concrete suggestions to get parents out of the endless cycle of debate. She employs anecdotal stories, gathered from her more than 20 years of counseling, and uses them to illustrate her strategies. Griffin is executive director of Proactive Parenting. She is a lecturer, writer and consultant to parents, teachers and health care professionals regarding child development, behavior management and issues affecting today's families. She is a frequent radio and television guest expert.

This is a free event. Anyone who is unable to attend and would like to order a signed copy can call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665.

Are you on the active voters' list?

Recently the Board of Registrars have mailed confirmation notices to voters who did not respond to the annual street listing (census) by the first of June. This mailing notifies the voter that their name has been removed from the active voting list and has been placed on the inactive voting list. In order to activate themselves they must return the postcard and they will be restored immediately to the active voters' list.

If a voter has moved to another city or town, they still need to sign and return the postcard. Their name will be immediately removed from the voters' list in Cohasset. To vote, they must register to vote in their new city /town. Mail-in forms are available.

If postcards are not returned the voter will be removed from the voters' list. Also, they will be removed if they do not vote in at least one of the next two state elections or take other action that would reinstate them as an active voter.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week. The House and Senate continue to meet in brief informal sessions at which little business is conducted.

Beacon Hill Roll Call reports local senators' roll call attendance records for the 2007 session through August 17.

The Senate has held 84 roll call votes. Beacon Hill Roll Call tabulates the number of roll calls on which each senator was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

Only 17 of the Senate's 39 members have 100 percent roll call attendance records. The worst roll call attendance record belongs to Sen. Pamela Resor (D-Acton) who missed 17 roll calls (79.7 percent roll call attendance record).

Rounding out the top members with the worst records are Sens. Patricia Jehlen (D-Somerville), Frederick Berry (D-Peabody) and Harriette Chandler (D-Worcester) who each missed 12 roll calls (85.7 percent roll call attendance record). Richard Moore (D-Uxbridge), Marc Pacheco (D-Taunton) and Marian Walsh (D-Boston) each missed eight roll calls (90.4 percent roll call attendance record).

LOCAL SENATORS' 2007 ROLL CALL ATTENDANCE RECORDS

The percentage listed next to the senator's name is the percentage of roll call votes for which the senator was present and voting. The number in parentheses represents the number of roll calls that the senator missed.

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

LANDLOCKED TIDELANDS (H 4184, S 2309) - The House and Senate have appointed a conference committee to hammer out a compromise version of a bill giving the state's Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) the statutory authority to exempt development and construction on "landlocked filled tidelands" from the strict licensing requirements of Chapter 91 – the state law that protects the public's access to the state's waterways. The House and Senate have approved different versions of the measure. Chapter 91 dates back to the Colonial era and was designed to allow the public access to the ocean and ponds for "fishing, fowling and navigation." As populations grew, many of these waterways were filled in and developed. DEP in 1990 began exercising the regulatory authority to exempt these landlocked tidelands. The Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) in February 2007 issued a decision stating that DEP did not have this power and had exceeded its authority.

SAFE HAVEN FOR BABIES (S 2177) - Gov. Deval Patrick recently signed into law a bill extending indefinitely a law allowing parents to leave their babies under the age of seven days at a police or fire station or hospital emergency room without facing criminal prosecution. The current law was scheduled to automatically expire on June 30, 2008 unless the permanent extension was signed into law.

IDENTITY THEFT (H 4144) - Gov. Patrick recently signed into law a bill aimed at stopping identity theft and preventing an impostor from opening a new credit account using stolen personal information. A key provision allows a consumer to temporarily "freeze" his or her credit report and prevent the three major credit bureaus from issuing the report without his or her consent. Consumers would be issued a PIN number to temporarily unfreeze their credit reports when they apply for credit. Most companies will not issue credit without a credit report and would deny an impostor's application for credit when a credit report is frozen.

FORM PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNIONS WITHOUT ELECTIONS (H 2465) - House Republicans continue to block final consideration of legislation changing the way that public employee unions can be formed in Massachusetts. The House for the past few weeks has met in brief informal sessions in which a single legislator can hold up consideration of a bill until the next formal session. The measure has already been approved by the House and Senate and only final approval in each branch is necessary prior to the proposal going to the governor. Under current law, if 30 percent of workers sign cards indicating their support for forming a union, a secret ballot election is held and a union is formed if workers approve the formation at the election. The bill would create another option that automatically creates a union without a secret ballot election if a majority of workers sign cards. Supporters say that current law favors management and gives employers a lengthy period of up to a year prior to an election to intimidate and even fire workers who campaign in favor of a union. Opponents say that the bill unfairly allows union organizers to intimidate workers into signing a card and takes away workers' ultimate power by abolishing their right to vote on a secret ballot.

GIVE ADOPTEES ACCESS TO BIRTH RECORDS (S 63) - The House approved a bill giving adoptees who are over 18 and were adopted before 1974 and after January 1, 2008, access to their birth certificates including the names of their biological parents. The 1974 cutoff date was chosen because the state in 1974 approved a law that required adoptees to get a court order to obtain the records. Supporters said that the measure would save lives by allowing these adoptees to have access to their families' medical histories. Opponents said that the bill would increase the number of abortions because biological parents would not longer be guaranteed anonymity. The Senate has approved a different version of the proposal and the House version now goes to the Senate for consideration.
